Miss Anderson Wed To Elgan Amidon In Nevada Service

The wedding of Miss Joan E. Anderson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Meads, 343 Apple street, to Elgan E. Amidon, United States Air Force, took place in Carson City, Nev., June 28. Mr. Amidon is a son of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Amidon, 730 West Eleventh street, Medford.

The single-ring ceremony was performed by Justice W. E. Dunfield at 11 o'clock in the morning.

For her wedding the bride wore a suit of white wool with navy accessories, and her flowers were red roses.

Mr. and Mrs. Leo Cook, brother-in-law and sister of the bridegroom, attended the couple. Mrs. Cook wore a gray suit with corsage of white and pink roses.

The newlywed couple made a wedding trip to Virginia City and Lake Tahoe and at present are with the bride's parents.

The bride was graduated from Modoc High school, Alturas, Calif., and is employed at Pacific Telephone and Telegraph company. The bridegroom, who was graduated from Medford High school in 1947, attended Southern Oregon college until 1950 and then taught school. Later he enlisted in the United States Air force and is now stationed at Keeler base, Biloxi, Miss.

Mrs. Amidon will make her home with her parents for the present while the bridegroom returns to service with the USAF.

The bride and her parents came here from California two years ago while the Amidon family has lived in the valley many years.

Honey Historical, Popular Says Food Store Expert

While Americans can't pay their taxes in honey, as ancient Egyptians did, they still like to eat it.

This is borne out by the fact that honey production in 1951 hit an all-time high of 249,053,000 pounds. Honey is so popular as a food now that we've even got a national "Honey for Breakfast Week."

The history of honey is as fascinating as that of the flowers from which nectar is drawn by the bees who make the honey. Bees from one hive may visit a quarter-million flowers in one day searching for nectar; it takes about 37,000 loads of nectar to make one pound of honey. Down through history, honey has been used as a beverage, as medicine, as a dowry and even as a ritual offering to the sun.

Many kinds of honey are produced in this country, varying according to the horticulture of various regions. There is honey from clover, which grows in practically every section of the United States, and honey from orange blossoms and sage. There is tupelo honey from the tupelo trees which grow in Florida and other parts of the South. There is honey from chinkapin, mesquite, basswood, horsemint and alfalfa, to name some more. There also is buckwheat honey from the midwest and far west which is used mainly for baking and commercial candy production.

Popular demand is divided between a blend of sage-orange blossom-clover and straight clover honey, according to an A & P food store expert, one of the nation's leading retailer distributors of the sweet.

Most of the orange blossom honey comes from California. Clover honey is especially abundant in New York state and also is widely produced elsewhere. Sage honey comes from southern California.

Historically, honey goes back virtually to the beginning of time. The Bible refers to Palestine as a land flowing with milk and honey and tells how Jacob, when he sent his son to Egypt, had him take a gift of honey to the ruler of that land. Ancient Egyptians used honey to pay their taxes and the Mohammedans revered the sweet as a miraculous medicine. The inhabitants of Peru offered the sweet in their rites to the sun and prospective bridegrooms in the Middle East used it as a dowry. In Rome it was a serious breach of etiquette not to offer honey to a guest.

Honey was made into a beverage in India and those who drank it believed they would gain strength, wisdom, happiness and other admirable traits. In Poland and Silesia, farmers tied honey-dipped strings around their fruit trees to insure a good crop. At funerals in Egypt, Morocco, Rome and the Hindu lands, containers of honey were placed in tombs both as food for the dead and as omens of good. Ancient stories referred to honey as "nectar of the gods." Aristotle, the Greek philosopher, called it "dew distilled from the stars and the rainbow." The Roman poet Virgil wrote in verse of "heaven-born honey."

They referred only to honey's delicious flavor. Since their time, science has proven that honey also has nutritional value. It contains many minerals and has an abundant supply of vitamins B and C. Moreover, since about 80 per cent of its composition is sugars, it far surpasses most other foods as a source of energy. Honey also is the only manufactured sweet available in commercial quantities.
