Reading a United Press story in Medford, where he moved in 1929; Tom in Boise, Idaho.

The two brothers each have a son named Robert. That is also the name of a third brother who is still missing. Sutherland said he hoped that newspaper publication of his story might help turn up Robert Riggins, the third brother, who was raised by the boys' father.

Mrs. Sutherland expressed faith in the power of the press in conjunction with a heavy dose of coincidence—to help turn up her husband's missing brother. She has seen it happen before.

During the war she read a story in the Portland Oregonian about a Northwest flier who was declared one of the nation's most decorated servicemen. That serviceman turned out to be a son of hers by an earlier marriage—a son she had lost all track of for some years.
