Old-Time Whaling Port Visited

There's More to See Than Big Redwoods Along Highway 101

The following is a condensation of a motorlog appearing in the June 29 issue of the Northwest's Own Magazine, Sunday Oregonian. It is one of an annual series sponsored jointly by The Oregonian and the Oregon State Motor association.

BY GEORGE SPAGNA
Staff Writer, The Oregonian

Not long ago, a university professor crawled through the gutlet of a dead sperm whale to prove that there was elbow room.

Yes sir, you can believe that story about Jonah.

A whale, and they grow to 70 tons can swallow a man, gulp down an octopus, an enormous squid or an eight or ten-foot shark.

Perhaps it's harder to believe that the proof, if such is needed, can be found smack in the middle of California's fabulous Redwood Empire. Hold on, there—on the coast, I mean. Look at the map.

Fields Landing is an unpretentious little fishing village a turn off the Redwood highway, little more than a stone's throw from Eureka, county seat of Humboldt county which boasts 60 per cent of the state's standing redwood timber.

It's an often-by-passed town, and rightly so, when compared to northern California's two coastal giants—Eureka and Crescent City. It's on your highway map, but not in a home-sized atlas.

But it IS reportedly the only active whaling station on continental USA, and the age-old whaling business is not dead by a long shot.

Two Whalers Used
Fields Landing is a friendly town that thrives on its fishing fleet but shows an unfriendly attitude to whalers. That was the opinion of ex-Portlanders Bud Newton, 41, at least. He captains the two government-licensed whaling ships out of the Landing.

His 136-foot Lynn Anne, a converted war surplus sub patroler, was idle, sleeping at the dock, when our white Oregon State Motor association's motorlog car pulled up to the waterfront.

Time was, only a year back, when the Lynn Anne harpooned the 16-ton sperms, finbacks and humpbacks right off shore. Anywhere from 10 to 40 miles out, Captain Newton said.

But the oldtime Norwegian muzzler harpoon, guns and her quiver of six-foot spears, have grown rusty on the Lynn Anne's restless bow. The captain scraped a gnarled hand downward across his leathery chin and tried to explain.

"The price for whales isn't right just now," he volunteered, but cynically.

But another whaler, foreman of the Maritime Industries Reduction plant where they used to untold the big whales, cut them up and boil them down into the high-quality oil, had another explanation.

Folks hereabout, he told this inquisitive motorlogger, just didn't take to the smell of whale. They're kind of unfriendly about it, he said.

The Lynn Anne and her brother whaler, the Dennis Gayle, put out occasionally to sea champing for the hail of "Dar she blows," but not like they did a few years back when the catch was 100 or more of the gigantic mammals a season.

The plant owners, Gilbert (Gib) Hunter, 34 who hailed originally from Waldport, and Herman Folland, 39, formerly of Depoe Bay, are making plans to move the plant elsewhere.

But there's no move in the immediate offing.

State Has Many Trees
Practically every kind of tree that grows north of the tropics is found in California, but none so magnificent as the redwoods.

Stretching both north and south of Eureka on Humboldt bay, whose 23,000 population and lumbering wealth make her chief port between San Francisco and Columbia river, are the fabulous giant redwoods.

Capt. Bud Newton, former Portlander, is proud of the muzzler loading harpoon gun mounted on bow of his 136-foot whaling ship. The whales are offshore, but the whalers don't wait out from Fields landing much any more. They may move out.

The most famous stand of all in the 22,000-acre Humboldt Redwoods state park, is just 40 miles south of Eureka. The tallest tree in the world (how they ever measured it the traveler wonders) is there—364 feet high.

Highway 101—the Redwood highway—winds through this incredible forest like a humble invader. The 20th century man, the highway builder, had to go around the centuries-old sacred giants instead of cutting them down.

Man brought his machines into the redwoods nevertheless. Deep inland, away from the highway's edge, the whirr of the chain saw fills the motorist's ears.

Redwood logging—for all its majestic endurance the redwood (sequoia sempervirens) is a soft wood—has been going full scale for ten years.

Elk Protected
Six miles north of Orick, in the 9100-acre Prairie Creek Redwoods state park, live the last remaining herd of native Roosevelt elk in the country. They graze (and multiply) safe from the hunter's gun.

Californians take good and deservedly tender care of their Redwood highway. All of the 100-odd miles of AAA car traversed after crossing the Oregon border is newly surfaced.

Something new, apparently a concession to the curve critic, is a straight new three-mile stretch beyond Orick. It erases some tiresome bends in the road, cutting across a sandspit down at the ocean's edge.

The Pacific ocean laps one side, and a paradox—a warm lake lagoon without a ripple—on the other.

Just north of Eureka lies Arcata, onetime terminus for the rich Trinity mine country. The wildly beautiful Trinity river is followed eastward by highway 299 across the state from here.

It's the front door to California's legendary gold country.

Rogue River
Rogue River—Major and Mrs. Cortland Gilmore of Garden Grove, Calif., and two friends, Thad Dickenson and Teddy Light, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Hughes last week. Young Dickenson suffered minor face injuries Friday when he struck a submerged rock while diving in Rogue river.

Mr. and Mrs. Chris Leyen, Kansas City, Mo., left Friday after a few days visit with the John Leyen family here. They will go from here to Iowa to visit relatives before returning to their home.

Janice Elliott, niece of Mrs. C. C. Cooper is spending the summer at the Cooper home on West Evans road. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Elliott of Lynnwood, who recently visited here.

Visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Larry Sheehan are his brother, William A. Sheehan and nephew, Billy, from New York City and Mrs. Pat Hoffman, an employee of the Herald Express is spending her vacation here.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Stouder, Goshen, Ind., are spending a week at the C. E. Willis home on Cedar street. Stouder is a brother of Mrs. Willis.

The volunteer firemen made a "dry run" to the Glen Black ranch on West Evans road one day last week and reported the fire was in Black's frying pan and Glen had taken it out into the yard by the time they arrived. Mrs. Black stated the utensil containing grease was left on the electric stove while the

Hard Working Young Queen Causes Concern to Subjects

London—(U.P.)—Britain's second Queen Elizabeth is "criticized by her subjects for only one thing.

They're afraid she's working too hard.

"She's young, and she and Philip should go with the younger generation more," Mrs. Anthony Mullen, a housewife from Cheshire, said as she stood in front of Buckingham Palace to watch the changing of the guard. "We'd like it if they'd brighten up the place a bit."

Worried About Burdens
In the House of Commons the members of Parliament are worried about the heavy burdens 26-year-old Queen Elizabeth assumed so uncomplainingly.

Besides cutting down the number of public appearances required of the monarch, the M. P.'s have even brought up the possibility of moving the royal family from "the white elephant"—Buckingham Palace—which is antiquated and highly inconvenient. Such a move, however, is unlikely.

This fatherly concern shown the young Queen is just one example of the devotion of the subjects.

Devotion to Duty
"She has the same devotion to duty her father had," explained one British businessman. "She has everything she needs to make her a beloved ruler."

Both men and women are frank to admit the appeal of a pretty, young queen.

The Annual Live Oak Grange picnic will not be held this summer. It was decided at a recent meeting. Instead, there will be a pot luck dinner at the hall Saturday, July 19, at 7 p.m. Members are requested to bring table service for their family and guests.

School district 35 will vote on July 18 on lighting the athletic field. Polls will be open from 7 to 9 p.m., at the high school building.
