Newspaper Stands on Pool Table Legs

Challis, Ida.—(UP)—The Challis Messenger boasts that it is the only newspaper in the world that stands on pool table legs.

The Idaho weekly newspaper, published by Halsey Gridley, has been on those same pool table legs since he bought the paper in 1929.

The building the paper is now occupying was built in 1878 as a saloon. Beneath it was a beer cellar.

When Gridley bought the paper, he moved it to the one-time saloon. He found that the floor had caved in and would not withstand the weight of the press.

He propped the floor and started looking around for something that would hold the floor and the press. He decided on a pool table.

When Idaho was a young state, the miners would come into town at night for their recreation. Pool was a favorite.

The miners, after shoving tons of rock and dirt around all day, were not inclined to be gentle with the tables. The tables had to be built to last for years.

Gridley cut off the legs of one table and sunk the five-inch square legs into the ground under the floor as a special bracing.

He then took another pool table and set the nine-ton press on it with the legs extending through the floor and into the ground.

Social Security Office Remodeling Completed

The field office of the Social Security administration, 33 North Riverside avenue, has been remodeled to make "one of the nicest government offices in the country," according to Field Representative Olin K. Kimbrel.

The office has been partitioned to take it out of the large office space that had formerly been an auto showroom.

Salmon's Sense of Smell Has Effect on Migrations

Ottawa—(UP)—People "smell" as far as Pacific salmon are concerned.

The Canadian fisheries research board said that human skin odors have an adverse effect on migrating salmon. If there's a human being within smelling distance of the salmon, the fish won't swim upstream to spawn.

Scientists attached to the research board proved the aversion of salmon to human beings during experiments at Tamp River, Vancouver Island, B. C. The department built a concrete fish ladder on the Stamp River to count and observe adult salmon during the period when they go upstream to spawn.

Too Much For Salmon Scientists first noted that the salmon disliked human odor when a man waded barefoot into the river about 20 feet upstream from the ladder to retrieve a tagged coho salmon.

"It was noticed at the counting point, three steps below the top of the ladder, that there was an immediate and noticeable drop in the upstream migration," the board said.

"The location of the disturbance was out of sight of the fish, and it was unlikely, with the noise of falling water in each step of the ladder that the sound of the disturbance could be heard.

"Therefore it seemed probable that an odor from human skin had repelled the fish. Further tests bore this out. An observer placed his hand in the flow of water passing over the sill into the step immediately above that in which counts were being made.

Proved Further "A minimum amount of disturbance and movement accompanied this act," the board said. "After one minute of immersion the hand was removed. A quite sudden and striking reduction in the rate of upstream migration occurred. From a mean rate of 34 coho each 10 minutes the number dropped to four one hour later a repetition of the test resulted in a similar decrease in the migratory rate."

As a result of the experiments, spectators watching the migration of salmon have been asked not to interfere with the fish or create a disturbance in the water with their hands.

Scientists made other tests to see whether any other odors, such as those from various organic substances, disturbed the fish. The fish paid no attention to these odors but were immediately repelled when a human hand was placed in the water.

Over $800 Given For Auditorium

More than $800 has been received to support the campaign for a Medford civic auditorium, according to A. A. Lausmann, temporary chairman of the Civic Auditorium association.

The group wants to collect $5,000 for its project. Letters have been sent to many businesses and individuals seeking both donations and suggestions. "This is a very worthwhile project and I will be glad to help if needed," declared the second contributor to the campaign. "We need immediate action," said another early donor.

Contributors' suggestions for facilities in the auditorium include a stage with adequate backstage facilities, a floor large enough for basketball games, bowling alleys, and rifle and pistol ranges.

Informing Lausmann that she would be "proud to help," a registered nurse wrote that the auditorium is to continue as a progressive, cooperative city. We must show pride in an adequate building program."

Checks may be made payable to "Civic Auditorium Association" and mailed to P.O. Box 1268, Medford.

An earthquake and fire, April 18, 1906, destroyed most of San Francisco with a loss of $300,000,000.
