Progress Noted Toward Auditorium

Considerable progress has been made in the preliminary work of forming an organization and planning a campaign to secure a civic auditorium here, according to A. A. Lausmann, chairman of the Civic Auditorium association which was set up a few weeks ago.

Chairman Lausmann reported today that a number of civic minded men and women of the community are giving the promotional effort generous support and that church groups and women's organizations have expressed interest and offered help in the campaign. "These groups are heartily supporting the efforts of the association because of the opportunity they see for the cultural advancement of the community which would be possible if facilities were available," Lausmann said.

Services Given Free
Lausmann also stated that the city planning commission and county court are working with the association in efforts to coordinate all plans for present and future development of the auditorium. The firm of Harvey and Watkins, consulting engineers, is cooperating in preliminary matters, and two local architects, William Laing and Robert J. Keeney, have offered to draw preliminary sketches of the structure without charge, it was revealed.

Attorney Stanley Jones has proffered free service in connection with legal questions which may arise and Col. Ben Stafford has volunteered his services as full time administrative assistant to Chairman Lausmann, the latter said.

It is planned to appoint temporary committees to handle all phases of the auditorium campaign in the near future, according to the chairman, who added that individual suggestions and contributions will be gladly received. They should be addressed to the Civic Auditorium Association, P. O. Box 1268, Medford, Ore.

This year they balloted 199 for Dwight D. Eisenhower and 18 for Gov. Adlai Stevenson, indicating that 26 more guests were registered than four years ago.
