Westchester area in 1941
This part of the Inglewood exchange was mostly open fields ten years ago.

Westchester today
A tremendous housing development brought thousands of new telephone customers.

See how Westchester has changed

You may find that here is the telephone story of your town, too

1. Like the rest of the West, the Inglewood-Westchester area has grown amazingly in the last decade. Population in the area served from the Inglewood telephone exchange has jumped from 42,000 at the beginning of 1942 to over 100,000 today. Much of this growth came in the Westchester community, where an entirely new city has been created. Providing telephone service to so many new homes and businesses has been a real challenge.

2. Just as soon as materials were available after the war, telephone construction got underway. Twenty-one thousand feet of floor space was added to the central office building in 1945, more than 12,000 in 1946. Into this building we rushed huge quantities of intricate central office equipment — more than two and a half million dollars' worth. And, to link new telephones with the central office, we have strung more than 133,000 miles of wire, put up 1,500 poles. Construction has recently begun on another new three story addition to the Inglewood telephone building to provide room for even more central office equipment.

3. Telephones went in at a record-breaking rate. In 1942 we served about 7,000 telephones from our Inglewood exchange. Today it's well over 34,000...the result of an investment of $8 million. Even so, growth in the Inglewood area has been so rapid, we're still not able to fill all orders as fast as they come in. Today we're short of many of the critical materials we need...but we'll keep doing all we can to fill all orders and those which we know still lie ahead.

Your telephone is one of today's best bargains

Up and down the West, the Inglewood-Westchester story has been told in hundreds of towns. Fast as the population has grown, the telephone has grown at an even faster rate...twice as fast in the territory we serve. For at today's prices, the telephone is so economical more people can afford it...so useful, more people want it.
