

The largest gathering of Indians to be seen at any Western show come to the world-famous Pendleton Round-Up. They live in tepees on the Round-Up grounds and participate in the arena shows and the Westward Ho! parade, an event of Friday morning, Sept. 11. Round-Up audiences particularly like the dancing of Indian children. Round-Up dates are Sept. 10-11-12.

Six Persons Killed In Head-On Crash

Yuma, Ariz.—(U.P.)—An unsuccessful attempt by a car to pass a semi-truck was blamed today for a three-car collision in which six persons were killed and five others injured, one critically.

Arizona Highway Patrol officers said the collision occurred on U.S. Highway 80 some 50 miles east of here yesterday.

The dead were identified as Mrs. Rose Fang Lee, 35, Tucson; her daughter Evelyn, 6; Mrs. Jennie Self, 35, Brawley, Calif.; her husband, James Self, 55; their son, William Allen Self, 3; and W. M. Simpson, 63, West Moreland, Calif.

Jerry Lee, husband of Mrs. Lee, who is in critical condition; and four of his children—Lillian, 14, Jerry, 12, Victor, 9, and Lester, 4. None of the children was injured seriously.

Chilean Official Denies No-Sale Report

Santiago, Chile.—(U.P.)—Foreign Minister Oscar Fennier yesterday denied reports from Washington that Chile has promised not to sell copper to the Communist nations.

But, the foreign minister said, Chile will accept no European orders while present price negotiations with the United States are in progress.

Fennier said Chile hoped to reach a "preferential understanding" with the U.S. and added that he was "confident the Washington negotiations will produce good results."

Washington Publisher Exchanges Charges With McCarthy on Freedom of the Press

Washington — (U.P.) — Gen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R-Wis.), and Philip L. Graham, publisher, have exchanged charges regarding a recent Post editorial and press freedom.

McCarthy said the editorial contained "falsification" and that this was of "more than academic interest" since the newspaper receives mail subsidies from the government.

Graham said the editorial was "fair" and declared he did not agree with McCarthy "that newspapers should be compliant to a senator's demands just because the Congress has voted mail rates that may provide a subsidy to newspapers.

On Wechsler Quits

The editorial in question dealt with the questioning of James Wechsler, editor of the New York Post, during hearings before McCarthy's permanent investigating subcommittee.

McCarthy objected to a statement in the editorial that Wechsler "was subjected to intensive interrogation about editorials in his newspaper critical of Sen.

McCarthy."

A committee of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, headed by the Post's managing editor, J. R. Wiggins, studied the record of the Wechsler questioning to determine whether freedom of the press was endangered.

The full 11-man group decided it was not its function to reach a conclusion. But Wiggins and three other editors issued a minority report saying that freedom of the press had been endangered.

Asks Questioning

In letters Friday night to the seven who did not join in the minority report, McCarthy for a second time asked that Wiggins be questioned about the alleged "falsification" in the editorial. No action was taken on a similar request he made Aug. 14.

Wiggins is on vacation in Maine. In a statement, Graham charged that McCarthy was "attempting to disguise his real purpose as a personal attack on Mr. Wiggins." The real purpose, he said, is "to deny the right of an independent newspaper to express its own editorial opinions."

Joggerly Lesson . . .

Spain ceded all claims on the Pacific north of the 42nd parallel of latitude in 1819, when the United States bought Florida. It became the southern boundary of the "Oregon Country."

The Russians in Alaska around 1821 declared possession of the North American Pacific Coast down to the 51st parallel, a claim disputed by both Great Britain and the United States.

We'uns made a two-nation treaty with Russia three years later that held the line to 54 degrees and 40 minutes north latitude. Next year Great Britain agreed. Then she squared off at the United States to what flag was to fly over the Pacific Northwest country between the 42nd parallel and old 54-40. The Russians were pleased. They always like to see Russia Britannia and Hail Columbia in each other's hair.

The United States and Great Britain peacefully agreed to joint occupancy of Oregon, however, until their treaty of June 15, 1846. The boundary was left at the 49th parallel, with a southward dip to leave the whole of Vancouver Island to the British, with half of Juan de Fuca Strait.

More Seesawing . . . Boundary making was a great national concern of the time. The lines between Canada and Maine had been in long dispute, until August, 1842, when they were settled by the Webster-Ashburton treaty. From 1820 to 1848 the southwest boundaries of the United States were an issue that was decided only by the annexation of Texas and the dirty Polk War with Mexico.

U. S. possession of California brought up a new question on the extension of the Missouri Compromise line on the 36-30 parallel through to the Pacific Coast. This would have given Southern California to slavery and the northern part to freedom. For the politics of it, look up "The Wilnot Proviso" in your history books.

General Stephen W. Kearney was sent west with 1,800 soldiers in 1846, to conquer California. Utah's powerful Brigham Young sent 500 Mormon volunteers west to the legendary land, and made ready to move to Utah. But before them all Captain John C. Fremont, of the U. S. Engineers, was making his "Pathfinder" name—but not exactly earning it.

In California Fremont made contact with an American naval force that was cruising off Monterey Bay. Once more the Marines landed, with sailors, too. They joined the small Fremont expedition, overthrew the Mexican government and formed a provisional government under something called the Bear Flag.

There was a tremendous row when General Kearney arrived. It boiled over in a court martial for Fremont, caused his dismissal from the Army, led to a famous feud between Democrat Senator Benton of Missouri and Democrat President Polk — and finally, in 1856, to Fremont's selection as its first Presidential nominee by the new Republican Party. He was not elected.

The Dust Settles . . . On an Oregon expedition in 1843, Fremont had descended the Columbia to Fort Vancouver, then had returned up river as far as The Dalles, from there striking out overland to California. He explored—but did not discover—a route that California vaqueros were to follow with cattle herds, meeting the voyageurs of Canada on the Great River of the West.

The Mexican War came formally to an end in February, 1848, California was ours—and, incidentally, Texas, too. On August 13, 1848, Oregon Territory came into existence. Abraham Lincoln declined the governorship. Governor Joseph Lane—later as Congressional Territorial Delegate to foster the birth of Washington Territory—took office on March 2, 1849. He was a mighty good man. It is well for the richest timber county on earth to be named for him.

MONDAY BLUES

Knoxville, Tenn.—(U.P.)—It was a pretty gloomy Sunday, two Monday decided Tuesday. Brothers J. F. and J. W. Monday were charged with breaking into a cafe Sunday. They were brought to jail Tuesday and were tried in court Wednesday.
