As We Live

By ELIZABETH HURLOCK, PH.D.

ADOPTION OF A BOY CAN SAVE A MARRIAGE

After years of childless marriage, a man is sometimes tempted to seek a new wife in hope of having offspring. This wife should not give up her husband so easily to another woman:

(C) "We have been married 18 years. Two years after our wedding the doctor told me we would never have any children. I work and help to keep up our home. Last week my husband asked me for a divorce. He has fallen in love with a woman who has a daughter by her first husband and is going to divorce her second husband to marry mine. She has told him she loves him so much she will give him a son. I love my husband and want to keep our home together. What shall I do?"

(A) If the obstacle to your marriage has been lack of children why not consider the possibility of adopting a child, or perhaps two or three children? You could then have the son your husband seems to want.

To a man who has longed for children the hopes of having a son are sometimes very impelling. This other woman who may have made him believe that she will give him the son he longs for if he will divorce you and marry him. Having one child already, she may have used this as an argument to prove to him that she can give him the children you cannot have.

However there is no known way to produce a child of a desired sex. This woman might have a houseful of girls. Then how would your husband feel about having discarded you?

Ask him if he would consider the possibility of adopting a boy, either a baby or an older child. If he wants a boy so badly, I am sure your minister or doctor could help you to make the necessary arrangements to get a child through one of the approved adoption centers.

Having shared the same life for 18 years, you should not break up your marriage now if the only real problem is lack of children. It can be remedied through adoption or through acting as foster parents for children who need a home and love from two parents.

They were accompanied by their son, Ward, who was en route to Eugene to enroll for the fall quarter at the University of Oregon. The young man, serving with the United States Army, is currently studying at the university under special assignment.
