November Sky Review

By J. HUGH PRUETT

Astronomer, Extension Division Oregon Higher Education System

November's arrival will find Mercury and Saturn huddling close to the sun, so close that observations of these planets will be impossible. By Nov. 14, however, Mercury will have moved far enough eastward that it can be seen as a bright object on the dawn sky in a direction almost southeast.

Brilliant Venus, which most of the year has been a splendid "evening star," is now setting in the southwest only shortly after the sun, so can be sighted only with difficulty. This fine planet will pass nearly between us and the sun (inferior conjunction) on Nov. 15 and will then be coming up in the eastern dawn before sunrise for the rest of the year.

Mars Low in South
Red-tinted Mars, by its rapid eastward motion among the stars, is still in the evening sky. An hour after sunset it can be spotted quite low in the south. Although yet fairly bright, it is now greatly dimmed from its splendor of early summer when it was at the closest approach to the earth. Since there is no other bright stellar object in that part of the heavens, Mars can easily be located.

The only other naked-eye planet, Jupiter, now rises in the east-northeast between 10 and 11 p.m. Since this planet is very brilliant, there will be no mistaking its identity. The bright stars Pollux and Castor extend upward (in the order named) from Jupiter and form an almost straight line with it.

For identification of the conspicuous stars of early evening—planets are no stars—let us both above and below it. Low in the sky the familiar Big Dipper, right side up, hangs above the northern horizon. Observation an hour or two later will clearly show the Dipper is moving eastward. It encircles a point near the North Star each day.

Fairly well up in the north-east yellow Capella rules that part of the sky alone. A little north of east orange Aldebaran has only recently cleared the horizon. When higher, this star can be seen to be part of a letter V which is lying on its side with the tip toward the right.

Some distance above Aldebaran, note the small cluster of little stars in the form of a tiny dipper, the Pleiades (Pley-deez). A little northeast of the zenith the W of Cassiopeia's chair is easily spotted. When in this position in the sky it looks more like a letter M.

Gangway for Value!

Here comes Mom's own special delivery man, heavy of cargo and light of heart. Home's mighty pleasant, and he's headed there with some of the things that help make it so.

Manufacturers bring his family better and better products all the time — result of constant competition against each other to keep their brands in demand.

That's where Mom's smart. She knows this. So she reads this newspaper to keep up on latest product improvements... to learn about entirely new items... to find out where she can get them. And when she learns which brands serve her best, she buys by the trademarks that identify them.

... that's how Mom keeps home sweet home.
