Festival Directors Plan Fifth Play For 1955 Season

Ashland — Five instead of the usual four plays will be in the repertoire for the coming Oregon Shakespearean festival season.

The fifth play—to be staged on two evenings during the season—is a work almost never staged, "Timon of Athens."

When added to the plays already scheduled—"Midsummer Night's Dream," "Macbeth," "All's Well That Ends Well," and "Henry Sixth, part 3," the Greek tragedy, directors believe, will make the coming season one of the most exciting yet staged in Ashland.

For several years, festival directors have discussed the idea of doing special performances of rarely-produced plays such as possible to produce on a modern "Timon." Many of these are important but should go well on the festival's huge Elizabethan model.

The play will be produced on August 23 and August 29 this season.
