Finding Hawaiian Stamps Reduces Cost of Vacation

Dick had just returned from a vacation in Hawaii. "We had been there about three days," he said, "when I was in the shop of a Mr. Omura as a clerk emptied a waste basket of old correspondence into a bin nearby. "Fortunately I happened to notice that a couple of the letters had stamps with a picture of an old Hawaiian king like one you showed me once and said was worth a lot of money. So I asked him if I might buy it, and Mr. Omura insisted on giving them to me. When I got back to the hotel I found one of the envelopes had ten stamps in it, all unused. "I put a tape measure on it. From the base to the tip of the glass chimney was an even 26 inches. The lamp was not exactly what I had in mind. But it would do. My problem was to get some kerosene lamps in a hurry. Nearly every kerosene lamp I had seen that day had been converted for electrical use and thus rendered useless for its original purpose. Except for a couple of very small ones and the one I was now considering, I hadn't seen one that hadn't been altered. I asked how much it was. "That'll be $15," he said. I protested that the price was too high by half. He listened patiently. "All right, mister," he said. "You got a real bargain here. This globe," pointing to the one which the chimney went through "is Dresden. The shank there rising from the brass base is real carrara marble, and the oil reservoir is real brass, too." Some days later when my niece Judith heard what I got it for, she virtually accused me of robbing the storekeeper. "I don't care if there isn't a mark to indicate who made it, this lamp is worth from $60 to $75 retail," she said.

KEROSENE LAMP PROBLEM SOLVED

"That'll be $15," he said. I protested that the price was too high by half. He listened patiently. "All right, mister," he said. "You got a real bargain here. This globe," pointing to the one which the chimney went through "is Dresden. The shank there rising from the brass base is real carrara marble, and the oil reservoir is real brass, too." Some days later when my niece Judith heard what I got it for, she virtually accused me of robbing the storekeeper. "I don't care if there isn't a mark to indicate who made it, this lamp is worth from $60 to $75 retail," she said.

'LIBERTY' MISSPELLED ON HALF DIME

"Is this a rare coin or isn't it?" the little man asked. The coin he shook out of an envelope was a half dime. I could tell at a glance it was in good condition. Paul took a look at it through a magnifying glass. It was lying with the reverse side up. It had been circulated, but so slightly that even the letters of the motto "E Pluribus Unum" stood out clearly on the scroll held in the eagle's beak. The obverse side was equally clear. The draped bust of Liberty, facing right, was flanked by seven stars on one side and six on the other. I was about to comment on a slight nick in one of the stars and a little marring of the ribbon with which the sides of the Liberty head were bound back when Paul looked up at the little man. "This is a rare sample of the 1800 half dime," he said.
