Voting in Arizona

Provides Clues for Political Experts

Phoenix, Ariz. — (U.P.) — A survey of votes cast in the September primary election in Arizona might provide some clues for political experts and pollsters who sometimes get caught on the end of a long limb on a "sure thing."

A total of 57.08 per cent of the 289,477 persons eligible to vote turned out at the polls after a dull primary campaign. Some "experts" basing their predictions on apathy in the population centers of Phoenix and Tucson, had forecast at best a 50 per cent turnout.

The forecasters' apparent failure to look beyond Maricopa county, of which Phoenix is the seat, and Pima, where Tucson is located, also showed up in the explosion of a state axiom that to win, a candidate has to
