

Corporal Punishment Still Carried Out In British Schools; Some Suits Filed

London — (U.P.)—They've been debating for generations whether you spoil a child if you spank the rod, and in England the question seems no closer to being answered than anywhere else.

Although in this country, unlike in America, corporal punishment is carried on in some of the schools.

Parents File Lawsuits
Half a dozen lawsuits have been filed recently by parents who object to having their children's hide tanned by the schoolmaster. Judging from similar cases in the past, the schoolmaster probably will be upheld if there was no flagrant abuse of the spanking privilege.

Canes are used in many English schools to convince an unruly boy that the teacher is boss. In Scotland the instrument is more likely to be a "tawse," a kind of strap.

There seems to be a curious sort of class distinction involved in the caning custom in British schools. The more exclusive and expensive a school, the more painful the punishment seems to be.

British Lord Chief Justice, Lord Goddard, has recommended that juries be permitted to decide a case in court by a simple "majority vote" instead of by a unanimous decision. His suggestion has touched off a lively discussion among editorial writers over such a significant change in Britain's revered system of trial by jury.

At this point it appears the "noes" have it. Most newspapers and spokesmen for the legal profession are opposing such a move.

Lord Noel-Buxton has just given up his hobby of walling across rivers. He says there are no more rivers to cross.

The 6 foot, 3 inch peer became fascinated some years ago by the idea that the Roman conquerors in Britain must have known of places to cross rivers on foot or they would have built more bridges than they did. He set about to prove his theory.

With an audience of thousands Lord Noel-Buxton tried to walk across the Thames near the Houses of Parliament. He made it, although he had to swim a few yards here and there.

Around Hollywood

Editor's note: The second in a series on what has made Grace Kelly a movie star.

Hollywood — (U.P.)—Grace Kelly hadn't been a star long in Hollywood before the gossip columnists began to link her with her leading men, but her friends say she is too career-minded to think of marriage now.

According to keyhole scribes, the Ray Millands separated over her; Bing Crosby and Clark Gable have been her dates.

Twenty-five-year-old Gracie has passed up the Hollywood swains to choose happier, witty New York dress designer Oleg Cassini as her steady escort. The usually evasive Gracie does say of Cassini, "I like him better than any man I know, but there is nothing serious now." They toured part of Europe together and last summer he met her family at their summer home at Ocean City, N.J.

Most of Gracie's dates have been older men, attracted by her amazing composure and maturity.

Hollywood Impressed
Those qualities in Grace impressed Hollywood where movie-makers are used to desperately unhappy actresses who came up the hard way and grub for a living. Grace is a type foreign to show business—born to wealth, schooled for social position and disciplined to be self-reliant.

Grace's father, John Kelly, was an Irish bricklayer who rose to become president of the largest brick-masonry firm in the U.S. Her German mother was a cover girl herself. Grace has a married sister, Peggy; a brother, John J., a champion oarsman twice winner of the English Diamond Sculls, and a younger sister, Liz, already offered movie rolls.

At 10, Grace, a mimic at home, decided to go on the stage. At 11 she appeared in a school play and grandly helped her stage mother remember her lines. After flunking a college entrance exam, Grace entered the American Academy of Dramatic Arts in New York.

Worked as Model
To support herself (she wished to be independent) she worked as a model. She was a cover girl and often appeared in fashion newsreels. She eventually began to land TV acting roles and read unsuccessfully for 30 stage parts. At last she snared a Broadway show that won her a movie role in "Fourteen Hours."

Later she was brought to Hollywood for "High Noon" but Grace realized she had much to learn. The actress, then heavier and wooden, casually turned down an MGM contract and returned to New York for more TV and radio work. After 70 TV roles she felt she was ready for big films and accepted "Mogambo."

"The main reason I took it," she once casually remarked, "was because it was to be made in Africa and I wanted to go there."

Signed MGM Contract
She then leasurately signed an MGM contract. Directors, intrigued by her poise and self-confidence, flocked to sign her for "Dial M For Murder," "Rear Window," "The Bridges of Toko-Ri," "Green Fire" and "Country Girl."

Offstage Grace strikes some persons as being aloof. She looks upon interviewers often with the amused tolerance of a deb at a cocktail party. But her friends say she is not high-hat.

"She is a bit shy," one said recently. "Also, she just wants to act and she doesn't see why she should have to talk about herself."

Strikes Fewer During October

Washington — (U.P.)—The Labor Department has reported there were fewer new strikes in October than in September, and less work time lost because of strikes.

There were three large, but brief, new strikes during the month, dock and trucking strikes in the New York and New Jersey area and a 10 day stoppage of construction workers in the south central states.

The number of new strikes in October was 300. There were another 200 strikes underway which had started previously. All told, there were 280,000 workers involved, and the strikes cost 1,800,000 man-days of labor.

An estimated 3,050 strikes started in the first ten months of the year, "substantially" less than in the same ten months of the preceding four years, according to the department's report.
