Diplomat Students Pass Up Study of Social Etiquette

Medford, Mass. — (U.P.) — Building diplomats at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy pass up cookie-pushing and the study of social etiquette for sterner stuff—history, law and economics.

Fletcher officials feel that the social tools of diplomacy should come naturally, and the theory seems to work. The 21-year-old institution, located on the Tufts College campus, has more than 700 graduates in the U. S. state department, international organizations, international business concerns and the foreign ministries of various governments.

But, Dean Robert Burgess Stewart explained, "We are not a trade school turning out diplomats."

"Strictly speaking," he added, "you can't train a diplomat. We take the students who have the qualifications and give them background to help them succeed in their career."

Some 60 students, including 20 from foreign countries, are taking courses this year leading to a master's degree or the doctorate under a faculty of 10 teachers and 11 researchers.

A new faculty member is Dr. Marek S. Korowicz, former Polish delegate to the United Nations, who made a dramatic break with his Communist-dominated country in New York last year. A former law professor at Poland's oldest university in Krakow, Dr. Korowicz teaches international law and organization.

Many foreign governments send their diplomatic personnel to Fletcher for training. Twenty-four Pakistani foreign service officers have attended Fletcher since 1950, including six currently enrolled, Indonesia, India, Korea and Thailand also have students at the school.

Among the high-ranking Fletcher graduates are: Boris Klosson, deputy chief of research on Russia for the U. S. state department; Harlan Clark, state department authority on the Middle East; Edward Jamison, deputy director of U. S. inter-American affairs; Jean Francois-Poincet, secretary to the French high commissioner in Germany.

Fletcher, which is administered by Tufts College with the cooperation of Harvard, also does important research work. Its staff advises the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, the Ford and Rockefeller Foundations and many other groups on international policy. It is beginning a three-year study of the social democratic movement in Japan under a Ford Foundation grant.

Although Fletcher trained some eastern European students before World War II, Dean Stewart said that so far as he knows "none are now serving Red-controlled foreign ministries."

SCIENCE AT WORK

New York — (U.P.) — Make no mistake about this — the medical doctor can remove a wart, or warts. But you wouldn't think so, if you realized how many persons think he can't but that proper application of chick peas, string beans or a bloody rag can.

The anonymous medical authors of the Pfizer Spectrum, a strictly scientific leaflet circulated periodically among physicians, were complaining about the perversity of human nature which, from the remotest known time, has surrounded the wart with superstition.

"As 19 centuries of gratifying experience have shown, any number of proper techniques can remove a wart," the authors wrote. "The way to remove warts, if one is a dermatologist, is to cauterize with nitric acid or employ roentgen rays: if a surgeon, depending on the site of the wart, cauterization or excision.

"The only difficulty remaining is that one's own patient perversely goes out and picks up the chick peas, bloody rag, string beans or whatever has been used by somebody else — and here he is, back again, with a new crop of warts."

The chick pea remedy goes all the way back to Pliny the Elder, who lived from 23 to 79 A.D. Pliny said: "You are to touch the warts with chick peas on the first day of the moon, wrap the peas in cloth and throw them away behind you."

Sir Francis Bacon, according to the medical authors, rubbed his warts with a piece of bacon "all over with the fat side," and then nailed the fat to a post facing the sun. This "cured" warts in five weeks.

Other methods of his time, and the times following, were to "rub a wart with an impaled frog, with black snail shells, with a dead man's hand, or, according to Bacon, with "parts of living creatures that are nearest to the nature of excrescences," to wit: the combs of spurs of cocks, the horns of beasts, or corns or wens. Or a wart could be bled on a rag and the rag thrown away and some idiot picked it up and got the wart himself.

"In Ireland you pricked the wart with a gooseberry thorn through a golden wedding ring, or wound a hair around it until it disappeared.

By 1820, in Pennsylvania, they were back to rubbing things on and throwing things away. Now it was chicken's feet, roasted, that were afterwards to be buried under the eaves.

"In England the tail of a tortoise-shell tomcat was to be applied (only in May). In Sussex pins were stuck into a mountain ash tree, and evidently still are to this day. In New England warts should be rubbed either with a toad or with string beans that are later thrown over a fence. In the Middle West, the preferred treatment is with an old, damp dishcloth, immediately buried in the ground.
