PROGRESS

America has come a long way . . . from the log cabin to the skyscraper . . . from the covered wagon to the jet plane . . . from the hand plow to atomic energy.

The road has never been easy, but it has always been clearly marked . . . its milestones, the basic rights on which this nation was founded and by which it has lived and grown strong. The right of every man to determine for himself, the course his life shall follow. The right to choose his own work or to build his own business. The right to go as far as his own ability will take him in the direction of his choosing . . . the

It is these rights that spur each man to create and produce to the limits of his capacity . . . that prompt each business to give its customers more for less. It is these rights that have made America's might the wonder of the modern world.

With pride, America looks to its past. With confidence, it looks to 1955 and all the years ahead. Holding resolutely to a way of life so critically tested, so conclusively proved . . . we shall continue our forward march to a better life for all.
