Colored Pencils Help In Marking Packages For Freezer Storage
Colored pencils can help keep track of the "expiration dates" of foods stored in the home freezer.

The month and year when recommended storage life expires should be noted on a tag attached to every food package. If this date is written with a colored pencil that signifies the season, it will be easier to tell at a glance when foods should be used, suggest home economists of Deepfreeze Home Appliances.

A black pencil might be used for the winter months of December, January and February; a green one for March, April and May; a red one for June, July and August; an orange one for September, October and November.

Grouping packages in baskets or bags according to storage life also will help assure use within proper time limits.

A healthy pinch of chilly powder added to the mayonnaise gives extra flavor to a chopped egg salad.

Hawaii is Theme For Meeting of Talent Gardeners

Talent—Talent Garden club met at the home of Mrs. C. O. Long, January 5, with Mrs. John Baldwin as co-hostess. The hostesses wore leis and served fresh pineapple, toasted coconut chips and cookies.

Mrs. E. E. McGrew showed colored slides and movies of the trip she and her husband took to Hawaii. The pictures showed many of the lovely Hawaiian orchids, poinsettias and other native flowers as well as the pineapple plantations, sugar cane and coconuts.

Too Much Food Makes Poor Cook Author Declares

New York—(U.P.)—We Americans would eat better if we weren't fed so well.

All the good food in this nation has turned us into poor cooks, said Myra Waldo, author of a new global cookbook with recipes from 84 nations.

"American cooking, other than that along the coastal areas, is pretty sad," said Miss Waldo, "but for a wonderful reason. Ours is such a bountiful land... food is so plentiful and of such high quality we haven't had to develop fancy sauces and complicated recipes."

"It's been a case of too much meat, too little imagination.

"In Europe, the woman has more time for cooking because she's usually home all day," she explained. "She has more help because it is cheaper. There's one to cook, one to clean, one to wash up."

Miss Waldo, in real life the wife of Robert Schwartz, an attorney who also writes, rates three countries as tops in cooking. They are France, China and Italy, with Germany a strong contender for top rating.

"England's the worst," she said. "Nothing but brussels sprouts."

The author's "Round the World Cookbook" was compiled with the assistance of Pan-American airways offices in the 84 countries.

"I had to have some help," said she. "I've traveled a lot, but if I tried to visit every one of those countries I'd been 20 years writing the book."

When she wanted to double check whether recipes were typical of the country, she would just visit its consulate in Manhattan.

"I took a recipe for curried fish balls to the Burmese consul for checking," she said. "He looked it over and said he'd never heard of it back home. But it sounded so good he was going to try it."

Lack of a ring mold need not hinder your culinary efforts. You can improvise one by inverting a handleless cup inside a pan of suitable size.

Two London Restaurateurs Say British Cooking Best

By ROBERT MUSEL United Press Correspondent

London—(U.P.)—Carried away by patriotism, two restaurateurs claimed today that British cooking is the best in the world and this—snap the fingers—to any garlic-loving continental skeptic.

John Stais and Norman Isow, who are competitors in business but stand together in defense of the cuisine Anglais, said they make their statement in full awareness that next to mothers-in-law, jokes about British cooking get the most belly laughs anywhere.

They know the British aversion to sauces and spices and the sadistic national habit of drowning vegetables.

"The Material's There" "But this is looking at the worst of it," said Stais who feels royalty and celebrities as well as the ordinary gourmet. "The raw materials of the British cuisine are without equal in the world and if properly cooked cannot be beaten for plain, wholesome food."

Neither Stais nor Isow is knocking the French of any other cooking for they both use dishes of many lands in their restaurants.

They use garlic as well but, interlarded with the foreign dishes they serve, are typically British dishes. And these, said Isow, are as good in their own way as is the finest saucedrenched French dish in its.

"Is there any ham better than York ham?" asked Stais. "Any beef better than Scotch beef?" inquired Isow.

They mentioned as "the best in the world" Aylesbury duckling, Southdown mutton fed on the seaside grasses of the downs, Norfolk turkey, Scotch salmon fresh and smoked if you can afford $3.65 a pound, royal sovereign strawberries, Cannonhall grapes, Cox's orange pippin apples, Evesham asparagus, English peaches, pheasants and grouse from the Scottish moors, Stilton and Cheshire cheeses. Almost lyrical.

Stais who conceals many exotic dishes for the plush guests at his White Tower Restaurant, became almost lyrical over the unvarnished splendors of English roasts and grills.
