

Explorer Photographs Rare Sable Antelope in Africa

New York—(U.P.)—The best way to "shoot" a giant sable antelope in Africa is to track down a couple of bulls locking horns in battle and move in cautiously with a camera for the "kill."

Explorer Quentin Keynes has just returned from central Angola in Portuguese West Africa where he led a small expedition over a thousand miles straight to a herd of 30 giant sables. He photographed these African rarities for the first time, alive and un wounded, from 100 yards.

Keynes, a youthful British explorer living in New York, is a great-grandson of Charles Darwin, author of the famous "Origin of the Species," and a nephew of John Maynard Keynes, British economist.

Found Between Rivers

The giant sable antelope is found only between two rivers, 30 miles apart, in Angola, Keynes said. It was first discovered by Frank Varian, who shot one and sent it to the British Museum where it was identified in 1916 as a separate species and named Hippotragus Niger Varian.

It was the last major animal to be discovered in Africa. Since then, the sable has been shot mainly by aristocratic sportsmen. Count Yeves' kill, in 1949 had a record horn-spread of 65½ inches. These large, curved, ringed horns are longer than the beast is high.

Keynes, accompanied by a Portuguese naturalist, a British sportsman, and two native trackers, found most Africans vague about the location of the giant sable. The expedition finally established headquarters at Kamalanga, a camp which had been specially built for Count Yeves.

"The first day out, Keynes and his band spotted their elusive quarry, but for each step they took forward the wary herd took a simultaneous step away until night fell.

After spending a fitful night in the hut surrounded by roaring lions, the party started hunting the sable the second day, and found another herd 600 yards off. Luck was with them—two bulls started to fight so furiously that the herd moved off and Keynes moved in to the 100-yard range.

He shot the whole battle in colored still and motion pictures for 20 minutes.

Keynes said his are the first pictures ever taken of such a fight. After "shooting" these sables, Keynes received a letter from their discoverer, Frank Varian, now a 78-year-old resident of Capetown. Keynes went out of his way by 2,000 miles en route to New York to visit Varian.

Adventure Nothing New

"I first got the grand sable bug five years ago and happened to meet most of those who had shot the beast," Keynes explained. "My enthusiasm is for any rare and vanishing living thing, be it flora or fauna, that people generally don't know about or haven't seen photographed."

Such an adventure is nothing new to Keynes. He has made four trips to Africa and India since 1948, as well as to Napoleon's exiled island of St. Helena. He is a member of the Explorers Club, the Adventurers Club, and the Royal Geographical Society.

On Keynes' way to India, he stopped off at Mauritius, an island in the Indian Ocean, to photograph the final stamping ground of the dodo bird, extinct since 1691. He spent four months there because "I wanted to see the island where the dodo lived."

Santa Fe proudly mails its letters in a United States Post Office built of dried mud—a handsome, long-lasting structure of adobe.

Nose Gets in Way; Deferred Sentence Out

Providence, R. I.—(U.P.)—The judge almost granted 20-year-old William A. Patrarca a deferred sentence, but the prisoner's nose got in the way.

Patrarca—already serving a five-year sentence—put up his hand to take the bail oath.

"Wait a minute," the judge snapped. "None of that stuff. You put your fingers too close to your nose. The deferred sentence is withdrawn."

On The Side

Fast falls the snow, O lady mine, But by the rods we won't repine While we're together. So stir the fire and pour the wine, And let those sea-green eyes divine. Pour their love madness into mine: I don't care whether 'Tis snow, or sun, rain or shine If we're together. —Mortimer Collins.

Girl infants begin talking long before the boy babies. So I note it claimed. Seems logical. How old was your daughter when she voiced her first understandable word? I heard of a baby in Brooklyn, where so many remarkable infants are born, who said "mama" at the age of 4 months, "bye-bye!" at 6 months and "Peek-a-boo, I see you!" at 9 months.

Second Marriage

It was Dr. Samuel Johnson who cynically referred to a second marriage as "a triumph of hope over experience." Nevertheless the percentage of successful second marriages is higher than that of first marriages. More women are now marrying for the second time than ever before. One sixth of all recent brides in the U. S. A. have been widows or divorcees. A young and comely widow or a glamorous divorcee is terrific competition for a bachelorette in a battle for an eligible male. The widow or divorcee has a better understanding of men than the bachelorette. She is more likely to try to please the man than demand that she be always catered to.

Please Note

Are you a psychomat? In case you don't know, that is a term applied to people whose minds strongly influence their bodies. For example, a man who gets indigestion when his mother-in-law comes to spend a weekend at his house is a psychomat. So is a fellow who gets a headache or loses his appetite when he blows a three-horse parlay.
