As We Live

By ELIZABETH HURLOCK, PH.D.

Educational Lack Makes Mother Feel Inferior

One of the most important branches of our educational system today is that which focuses on adults. A woman writes:

(Q) "I left high school before I could graduate because my family was poor and I felt I should get a job. While working I met a young man and we were married. That was 18 years ago.

"We have two teenage children; both are going to college. My husband is a college graduate and is now a very successful businessman. Most of the people we associate with are college graduates.

"I am always so ashamed, when friends ask me what college I went to, to have to tell them that I am not even a high school graduate. I am afraid that my children will be ashamed of me. I am beginning to get an inferiority complex about this matter. How can I help myself?"

(A) If you are a good wife and mother, your family will not be ashamed of you just because you do not have a college degree. However, if you allow yourself to feel inadequate because of your limited education, you will keep yourself from being the person you could be.

Dr. Hurlock

Why not complete your education now? If your husband is a successful businessman, he can afford to give you some domestic help so you can study. Ask the principal of your children's school what would be the best and quickest way for you to make up the high school credits you need for a diploma. There must be some classes in adult education available in your community.

Then when you have completed your high school work, consider going on to get a college degree. Many state universities offer "extension courses" in different parts of the state. There are also courses by correspondence and television. Write to your state university and ask what facilities it offers. Even if you had to take some work on the campus, you might do this during the summer as a part of your vacation.

Your Health and Its Care

UNSANITARY NINETEENTH CENTURY HOSPITALS

A little more than a century ago (1843) a young whippersnapper by the name of Holmes published a paper on "The Contagiousness of Puerperal Fever." Doctor Holmes, Oliver Wendell Holmes, was 34 years old at the time, and a poet to boot! In his essay, which must always remain a classic of medical literature, the courageous young man—thank Heaven he was a young man—said:

Dr. Brady

"I have no wish to express any harsh feeling with regard to the painful subject . . . it is as a lesson rather than as a reproach that I call up the memory of these irreparable errors and wrongs" (in the practice of obstretics). "God forbid that any member of the profession to which she trusts her life, doubly precious at that eventful period, should hazard it negligently, unadvisedly, or selfishly."

That's the prologue for a show I wish I could have seen—but from the back row in the gallery, so I could leave hastily if it became impossible to suppress a guffaw. On more than one occasion this propensity has betrayed me.

The sheer gall of it! A callow youth pleading for asepsis (surgical cleanliness) in obstetrics! The reaction was typical. In minuscule the same thing has happened when I have informed the public of alternatives for major operation in selected causes of hernia, hemorrhoids or infected tonsils.

At the time Holmes published his essay two American obstetricians were pre-eminent. When they pronounced their views no one dareed to challenge them—until the young poet stepped forward. They were Hodge, Professor of Obstetrics in the University of Pennsylvania and Meigs, Professor of Obstetrics in Jefferson Medical College.

Boy, were these big shots sore! The castigations I have received from racketeers are trifling slaps on the wrist compared to the ridicule, satire, ponderous invective and abuse these autocratic spokesmen for the medical profession directed against young Dr. Holmes.

But today Professors Hodge and Meigs are remembered, if at all, only for their blindness, while the name of Oliver Wendell Holmes is linked in medical history with the name of an even younger man, Dr. Ignaz Philipp Semmelweiss, a Hungarian, who proved in Vienna hospitals that most puerperal fever—childbed septicemia or "blood poisoning" could be prevented if the doctors, nurses and others attending women in childbirth would disinfect their hands and instruments.

Now the racketeers will consider what follows going from the sublime to the ridiculous, but who cares?

The occurrence is usually hushed up for the sake of the hospital's reputation, but the truth is that from time to time, in the top notch lying-in institutions of the day, an outbreak of infantile diarrhea strikes and usually this is fatal to some of the new-born infants who are kept crowded together behind the plate glass window in hospitals where nineteenth century methods are used.

When the infants are chucked into the nursery as exhibits for visitors and sight-seers, instead of being kept in bed or in bassinet besides mother's bed, where mother can nurse, move, cuddle, care for and protect her baby to make sure the baby won't be mixed up with some other baby, the conditions are favorable for the spread of infection from one baby to the next, by the nurses who perform there in the show window.

It is a matter of record that such an outbreak of fatal infantile diarrhea in a Pennsylvania hospital a few years ago knocked the nineteenth century obstinacy out of the managers of a North Carolina hospital and brought twentieth century obstetrics to the institution.

How about it, customers. Do the old fossils in your community still insist on giving newborn infants a chance to share in whatever epidemic may come to the show window nursery?

Tests now prove beyond any doubt that dogs prefer filet mignon with mushroom sauce 5 to 1 over canned dog food.

This simply means that if you want to keep your dog happy you'll have to trade him your fork for his can opener.
