

Buried Treasure

by Pinkney Gage

Dreyse Needle Gun Added to Collection

Sid took it out of its velvet lined case as if it were a piece of fragile glass instead of the latest addition to his collection of revolvers.

"This," he said, "is a double action, needle-fire piece turned over by the noted German Johann Nikolaus von Dreyse."

My first impression of it was that the inventor had made it in a hurry — certainly without spending much time on the design.

For one thing, the overall length of the piece was eleven inches while the length of the barrel was only four. For another, the trigger was unnecessarily heavy and awkward, so much so that when I pulled it through the firing position it very nearly took the skin off my forefinger.

Except for the bolt, the trigger and the trigger guard, the piece was blued throughout. The grip was carefully checked, and a lanyard ring in the butt indicated that this particular weapon had evidently been intended for either military or police use.

"It seems like a genuine action, needle-fire piece turned over by the noted German Johann Nikolaus von Dreyse."

Beneath the cylinder on one side, I noted the caliber marking as 0.35.

"How do you think it'll work?" I asked.

For an answer Sid removed the cylinder and let me look down the barrel against a bit of white paper. The piece looked factory clean.

"I paid him $100 for it," Sid said with the air of a man who has won a great bargain, "and it's dirt cheap. There probably aren't a dozen of them in America. As far as I'm concerned, I couldn't have done better if I had bought a $1000 bill with my five twenties."

STAMP COLLECTING AIDS IN KNOWLEDGE

"What was 'rappen' mean," asked Emil holding up an orange-colored Swiss stamp and pointing to the bottom where it said 20 RAPPEN.

Emil's father, Karl, took the stamp to examine it.

"This is the chief importance of stamp collecting," he said, "it makes you learn things." And with that he proceeded to point out that the reason why the stamp had the words 20 centimes, 20 centesimi and 20 rappen around three of the sides was that Switzerland was a trilingual country with French, German and Italian the official languages.

"But that isn't the only lesson this stamp has to teach," he continued. "There is another. What about the cross on the shield the woman holds?"

"It looks like the Red Cross," the youngster replied.

"Right," answered Karl, "and when you can tell me why, the stamp is yours."

It was a good hour before Emil had got through with the encyclopedia and dictionary, but he had the story down pat.

HURD SILVER STRAINER SOLD FOR HIGH PRICE

It was a strainer of some kind but evidently not for tea since it was much too big for the average cup.

The bowl part was nearly four inches in diameter and the wings, which would rest on either side of the aperture through which the straining would be done, were a good four inches long each.

I hefted the piece. It was of old silver, coin probably, but evidently not sterling because of the absence of the sterling mark.

In fact, there didn't appear to be a mark on it, until I finally, on the underside of the right wing, detected a tiny rectangle almost half an inch long and maybe a quarter-inch wide.

"How much is this," I asked, noting the proprietor's approach behind me.

"Eight dollars and seventy-five cents," he said. "It's a nice strainer for making a pitcher of cold tea on a summer afternoon. It seemed to me a little doubtful that such was its purpose, but I paid the price without argument.

The strainer — evidently intended for punch rather than tea — was a splendid piece that had seen much use. Though the under side of the wings had been worn down somewhat, the mark was plainly visible in the bright daylight. I could read it now. It consisted of the letters I HURD.

That was enough for me. Anything in the silver line marked that way, or HURD, or even I-H, almost certainly was made by Jacob Hurd of Boston who died in 1758 at the age of 56.

I kept the piece for better than a decade until, three years ago, when a friend of mine decided that he wanted it as a wedding gift for his niece.

He complained bitterly at first, but I was adamant, and he finally handed over $325.
