Wheat Combines May Be Used on Corn

Lincoln, Neb.—(U.P.)—An agricultural engineer predicts farmers in the next 10 years will be combining corn with the same machine used on wheat.

The engineer, L. W. Hurlbut, chairman of the University of Nebraska agricultural engineering department, says he thinks wide-scale corn combining is just a matter of time.

"Experiments indicate the combine will do an excellent job of shelling and cleaning corn," he said.

The university has been operating an all-purpose combine, manufactured by a commercial firm, for about a year.

The machine was used on wheat and grass, then in about two hours, adjusted to combine corn. It cuts off the corn stalk, draws it into the machine where the ear is removed and shelled, then ejects the stalk and corn cobs to the ground.

He said interest in development of an all purpose combine was accelerated by improved methods of grain drying. The combine gave "encouraging results with corn containing 27 per cent moisture—too high for safe cribbing. Thus, artificial drying methods are needed."

WHO DOESN'T WANT TO FEEL BETTER?

A periodic drinker solemnly declared that between binges he never touched liquor nor wanted it but that from time to time he just felt the need of a stimulant.

I assured him alcohol is not a stimulant. Well, he continued, then just say I drink when I want to feel better.

For that matter, everyone who doesn't feel just fine and dandy would like to feel better.

But it is not at all logical to imagine a drink or any number of drinks can make one who is tired, blue, discouraged, weak, sad or unhappy feel better. Not really. Not any more than a hypodermic of morphine or heroin or a sniff of cocaine or a barbiturate tablet can.

To be sure, the cocktail or highball or straight liquor does not deprave or pervert character as quickly as these other "sedatives," sleeping pills or narcotics do. Still, we must remember, alcohol is a depressant, a narcotic, and in no circumstance a stimulant.

When the drinker takes a drink "because he wants to feel better," he or she really wants the narcotic because it is an intellectual depressant. A drink or two or three drinks enough to make any one unfit to drive a car—first depress the highest cerebral centres (intellectual) and then the lower cerebral centres (motor, emotional, animal).

When the highest cerebral centres, anxieties, incompetence, slightly stupefied the individual is less aware of his or her worries, anxieties, incompetence, deficiencies, and so, for an hour or more or less, the poor soul imagines he "feels better," when in fact his perception is for the time being in abeyance. When the narcotic effect of the alcohol wears off he or she will feel as bad or a little worse than before, and so . . .

For that matter, who doesn't feel the need of stimulant occasionally? And who doesn't want to feel better?

That is not a rhetorical question. There's a good logical (physiological, psychological) answer, namely, the well nourished individual, I mean to say that one in A-1 or optimal nutritional condition doesn't feel the need of a stimulant. He or she feels just fine and dandy and not only doesn't want to "feel better" but doesn't want to miss anything by dulling or benumbing consciousness or sense of well being even for a little while or as company for the misery of those who urge him or her to have just one narcotic with them.

How does one keep feeling fine and dandy?

For most of us the answer is so simple that we refuse to take it seriously. But that is because most of us are thirty years behind the times. Physicians and laymen alike are impervious to the newer knowledge of nutrition. Nevertheless, if I can get in a word while the amateur and professional psychologists are drawing breath, let me say that malnutrition or, as we call it nowadays, nutritional deficiency, is the chief cause of drinking.

This applies, I believe, to occasional, social, moderate or habitual indulgence and to chronic drunkenness, alcoholism, dipsomania or whatever you prefer to call addiction to alcohol.

If my view of the drinking question or my attitude seems harsh, unsympathetic or fanatic, I'm sorry. I confess I hate drinking with all my heart—and oh, oh, maybe we had better leave it at that. At the same time, I weep for the victims of drink, especially for the children, the wives and other loved or ought-to-be-loved ones.
