Stamps On Envelopes Said To Have More Value

Tom, a stamp collector, came across a letter mailed by his Uncle Raife from Mesopotamia in 1915. His wife poked fun at him when he made a mad dash for his catalogue to learn the value of the eight stamps spread in a row across the top of the envelope.

"She followed me a few minutes later," he said, "wanting to know if it had done me any good to be in such a sweat. 'Did your old stamps prove to be worth anything?' she asked.

"Incensed by her attitude I calmly pointed to the place in the catalogue where it shows the picture of a 10-para Turkish stamp of the 1916 commemorative issue surcharged 'Baghdad in British Occupation 1/2 An'.

GRANDPA'S DEN YIELDS VALUABLE CONCH SHELL

We entered the den from the living room through a curtain of beads and jet.

I made it safely to an armchair despite those hazards and various others, including strange pieces of Indian pottery and a cracked amphora.

His grandfather had been a sea captain in the days of the sail, retiring in 1885 some 20 years before his death. Joe explained, and this den of his contained something from every voyage the old boy had made.

"Most of it's junk, of course," continued Joe, "like that sea shell over there. Who would ever want a thing like that!"

He was correct. There was plenty of junk all right. Evidently the captain had made more voyages than Ulysses. But when I looked at the shell I felt that it might be a very special kind of junk.

It was a big one—13 inches high and over 10 inches wide, with the lip of the shell extending

"By comparing the picture with my stamps anyone could see that the latter were in excellent shape. The picture on them was just as clear as it was in the illustration, except for where the cancellation marks lay.

"She looked at them for about a half a minute and then flung her arms around me. 'Why they're worth $40 each,' she said, reading the small type, 'that means you can get me a new coat.'"

The best thing that I could think of was to congratulate myself silently on having said nothing about how such stamps were worth a lot more on the envelope than the catalogue price."

WISHER THREW VALUABLE SILVER DOLLAR IN WELL

"If we're not going to use the well any more, we ought to clean it out. After all, it might come in handy some day," Jean said.

"You know, it won't surprise me at all if we find some old coins down there," Jean said.

"Someone over the years must have used it as a wishing well."

I agreed. The well was an old one. It had been in continuous use for over 40 years, maybe longer. And though since the early 1920s it hadn't been used for drinking water, it had continued to supply water to the garden.

"Well, we'll get whatever coins there are today," said Ted. I dumped the muck on an old door and Jean combed it carefully with a garden rake.

It was surprising how much we got. The face value totaled $18.40—mostly in coppers and small silver. But there was only ing a good three inches above the point of spire. The coloring, however, was delicate, so clear that I felt I could almost touch it.

Turning it over I found a small label stuck to the underside of the lip. The writing on the label was in India ink in a cursive hand. It said: "Bahia, Brasil, July 12, 1878. $1."

"If your grandfather paid a dollar for this back in 1878, we had better make a careful investigation of its worth now," I said.

It didn't take very long to find a man whose hobby was conchology. At first he was reluctant to tell us, but he finally did.

"It's a Strombus Goliath—the largest of its type of conch shell—and there aren't more than 30 or 40 of them known in the entire country. Almost any museum will buy it, and you should get $200 or $300 for it," he said.
