Couple Gives Benefit Of Long Experience

Memphis, Tenn.—(U.P.)—Robert Baughman is 95, and his wife 92, but don't go calling them an elderly couple.

"I don't think anybody is any older than they feel," said Baughman, who added that he doesn't feel in the least bit too old.

In fact, said Baughman, he's known in his neighborhood as "The Kid."

The Baughmans married in 1931. Each had been widowed and each had eight children during their first marriages.

The Baughmans keep on the go, visiting people in their neighborhood who are ill or in trouble.

Mrs. Baughman had to slow down recently because her arthritis started troubling her. "The Kid" did the housework until his wife recovered.

Now, both are back visiting around in homes to give the "younger" folks the benefit of their combined 187 years of experience.

Around Hollywood

By ALINE MOSBY

Hollywood — (U.P.) — That famous fight scene from the old movie classic, "The Spoilers," was filmed again in Hollywood today — but in this 1955 version the doubles had their day.

Universal-International Studio decided to make the fifth celluloid version of the durable old western.

In the original 1914 silent, William Farnum and Tom Santschi sizzled the screen with a fight that turned into a real one. Santschi lost three teeth and a fractured hand and a blood clot in his cheek that almost killed him.

Thus I sped breathlessly to U-I sound stage 14 to be on hand when Jeff Chandler pummeled Rory Calhoun to a bloody pulp, or vice versa.

I found these two actors sitting casually on the sidelines, blood on their faces. On closer inspection, the red smears looked like nail polish. And how was the fight?

"Ask them," grunted honest Chandler, and pointed to two stunt men.

Chandler Fakes Hit

One of the stunt doubles had his hair dyed gray to match Chandler's. The other kept his dark hair long to be a carbon copy of Calhoun's.

The camera moved in for a closeup. Chandler faked a punch at Calhoun. Calhoun's head snapped back "so it looks like you get hit," he explained later. They sank to mattresses placed out of camera range.

Then the doubles took over for a long scene in which chairs were thrown, tables overturned, punches traded and bodies tossed down staircases.

Calhoun and Chandler watched the action with interest.

After several moments of silence, Chandler observed to Calhoun, "your double makes more noise than mine."

Farnum and Santschi were sent to the hospital for three days after their legendary battle. Farnum mourned before his death three years ago, "they all have to use doubles nowadays. They don't let you pare a fingernail yourself."

Minor Bruises

Chandler rolled up his trousers to show, rather proudly, bruises about the size of dime on his knees. Calhoun displayed an iodine-smeared bruise on one hand.

Director Jess Hibbs interrupted to say his "Spoilers" fight was a tamer version of the original. "It's been imitated in every T-V western with all sorts of gimmicks, so the only way we could be different was to go back to the old, simple routine of two guys who stand up and fight," he said.

The doubles by now were scuffling and grunting. One had a broken finger.

Chandler yawned, "Well, I guess I'll make a phone call," and sauntered off.

The "Spoilers" fight also was done by Noah Beery and Milton Mills in 1923, Gary Cooper and William Boyd in 1930 and John Wayne and Randolph Scott in 1942, or, rather, with the help of their doubles.

Formosa Crisis Focuses World Attention on Rocky Little Isles

Washington — (U.P.) — The Formosa crisis has focused world attention on a string of bleak and rocky little islands off the coast of China.

Quemoy, Matsu, Nanchi, the Pescadores — the names were unknown to many Americans until recently. Now they are in headlines almost daily as the world waits tensely to see whether Red China will try to seize them as stepping stones to invasion of Formosa.

Information Provided

To acquaint Americans with these suddenly-important piles of rocks, the National Geographic Society dug into its files today and produced the following information on the main islands involved:

Nanchi: The largest in a cluster of tiny islands 150 miles north of Formosa. Since the Nationalist withdrawal from the Tachens, the Nanchi group stands as the northernmost picket line against possible Red invasion of Formosa. They are now heavily reinforced and equipped with radar.

Nanchi itself is a rocky up-thrust barely a mile long, 800 yards wide at its broadest, and 750 feet high. It lies 20 miles off the mainland and some 40 miles from the Red port of Wenchow.

Matsu: 150 miles southeast of Nanchi, stands in the approaches to mainland Foochow, opposite the northern end of Formosa. Like Nanchi, it is ringed by a group of rocky islets subject to Nationalist control.

Quemoy and Little Quemoy: Lie within the outer harbor of Amoy, one of the Communists' most important ports. All together, they are not much bigger than Staten Island. Heavily garrisoned, the Quemoy's have been attacked, bombed, and shelled intermittently since 1949. Troops are dug into an elaborate tunnel system in the clay-and-rocky hillsides.

Has Fishing Village

Wuchiu: An isolated dot of land between Matsu and Quemoy, and some 14 miles out in the strait still reportedly held by Formosan forces. It has one large fishing village.

The Pescadores: 64 tiny islands totaling only 50 square miles, lying across the main body of the strait on the Formosa side. Penghu is the largest and holds the chief port, Makung. Collectively the islands are known to the Chinese as the Penghus; "Pescadores," from the Portuguese, means "fishermen."

No would-be attacker of Formosa in history has ever succeeded without first occupying the bleak Pescadores. Today approximately 80,000 people inhabit the island cluster, 30 miles off the Formosa coast.

On The Side

For everything created, in the bounds of earth and sky, has such longing to be mated, it must couple or must die. —Whyte-Melville.

Do you get a "coffee break" at your place of business? How much time are you allowed for lunch? Is there a rest period in the afternoon? The Swedes are great believers in "breaks" or rest intervals in the working day. The average Swedish workman gets off to an early start. Begins work at 7:30 a. m. At 9 a. m. he has an interval for breakfast of eggs, mush and fish. At 11:30 a. m. he gets a half an hour for luncheon of roast beef, potatoes and coffee or milk. At 2 p. m. he is allowed 15 minutes for coffee and cake. At 3:30 p. m. he takes time out for a smoke. At 4:30 p. m. he is through for the day.

Alimony

Only one fourth of the divorcees in the United States are collecting alimony. If you have an ex-wife to whom you are paying alimony, you might call her attention to this statistical information so she will know how fortunate she is.
