

Professor To Speak On Trade

Dr. John M. Swarthout, nationally known head of the political science department of Oregon State college, will be guest speaker at a luncheon of Medford League of Women Voters Saturday, March 5, in the Medford Hotel at 12:30 p.m.

Final arrangements for this general meeting were made at the League's monthly board meeting held in the office of the county school superintendent yesterday. Dr. Swarthout's return to Medford was requested by many who heard him speak on civil liberties here last September. Related to the league's trade survey, his topic this time will be, "These Disunited States." Reservations can be made by calling Mrs. Nick DeWitt, 2-5640.

The Medford league, one of 450 local leagues throughout the United States who have helped in making this nation-wide survey, has been seeking out information on who benefits from expanding United States trade with other nations and who gets hurt from expanding trade in this community. When the national league's work is completed, about 300 separate surveys will have been carried out. They will differ in scope and content but, insofar as is known, the total effort will constitute the greatest attempt made to date to determine the effects of foreign trade on our individual communities.

In addition to such information, the League also hopes to provide a collection of opinions of interested persons and groups as to how particular problems concerned with trade could be solved.

Mrs. H. P. Bosworth gave a resume of the work done to date by the league's committee on meat inspection legislation towards achieving the passage of Oregon HB 99, which concerns meat inspection on a state wide basis. Inspection as provided for in the bill would be financed by the meat industry which would in turn, include the added cost of inspection in the retail price

Tour Ended for Princess; British Express Approval

By ROBERT MUSEL, United Press Correspondent

London—(U.P.)—Princess Margaret comes home from her West Indian tour today. This is what London is saying:

1. She carried off her duties as royal ambassador magnificently. The British liked the way she fought against the formality which sometimes confines the royal family and the fact she stopped her car to receive flowers or chat with bystanders when possible.

2. The low-neckline gowns she wore were all right. The Princess trotted out some daring—royalty—necklines, but a London newspaper which asked its readers what they thought about them reported that 75 per cent were in favor of them.

3. Does she still love 40-year-old Group Capt. Peter Townsend, who suddenly left the royal household to become air attaché at Brussels when their romance was reported two years ago?

Birthday Approaching

The subject is timely because the princess already is six months past 24 years old and only six more months away from a date that looms larger with every passing day—August 21, her birthday. Then she can, if she wishes, announce her intention to marry without the approval of her sister, the Queen. Only an act of Parliament can stop it.

Townsend is divorced and the Queen, as head of the Church of England, cannot approve her sister's marriage to him.

Since Margaret has no really close friends, there is no one to whom she has confided the present state of her feelings toward Townsend. Court circles hopefully believe the romance is dead but an important Buckingham Palace source, asked for an opinion today, confided:

"If you find out, tell me." But regardless either of speculation over her romance or controversy over her low necklines, the princess also had fun on her trip.

She Had Fun
She rode the Rio Grande Rapids in Jamaica, sang in her bath, played the piano and almost joined the Calypso dancers. She ate exotic foods, tapped and swayed to the island rhythms. "O goody," she exclaimed to the governor of Trinidad, "I'm so glad you have a steel band."

Besides the neckline controversy, there was an unusual number of "sensations." There were reports before the tour started that she would not shake hands with persons in the islands, but a sharp announcement from Clarence House, her home, said she would "of course" shake hands. In fact she shook hands with as many people as possible and would have been glad to even more opportunities of meeting people.

Now, it is said, her ambition is a trip to the United States.

ELECTRICITY

...key to your future!

WHOEVER you are... whatever you do... your hopes for a better tomorrow are keyed to the production of more electricity. On the farm, in industry and at home, power demands will continue to double with each decade.

COPCO is meeting this challenge with its building program. In 1954 $12,196,058 were spent for additions and improvements to our electrical properties, bringing to a total of $94,753,318 the amount invested in additional generating capacity and other service facilities since the end of World War II. At Klamath Falls a $1,474,464 substation began operations and a new system load dispatching center was completed near Medford. Transmission and distribution lines were considerably extended all through the Copco system, and surveys continued to be made in connection with the proposed Klamath and McCloud River developments.

In 1955 an estimated $10,000,000 will be spent on further expansion. As a part of the year's construction program, Lemolo No. 1 hydro plant on the upper North Umpqua River will be completed. In addition, work will continue on Lemolo No. 2 and on other hydroelectric projects.

You have a stake in the Pacific Northwest. With its rich natural resources, it is one of our last frontiers. COPCO, a western company owned and operated by western people, will grow with your community, bringing to you the necessary power for progress.
