Twelve Tourists Invited To Eat Way Around France

By ELIZABETH TOOMEY
New York — (U.P.)—Twelve tourists with hearty appetites and $2895 to spend have been invited to eat their way around France this summer.

The idea of featuring food instead of scenery is definitely a post war development among the people who are paid to show us around Europe during summer vacations.

"We eliminated the word 'tour,'" said Andre Surmain, 34-year-old food appreciation promoter, who, with his wife, Nancy, planned the latest eating vacation. "Tour calls to mind a huge group of people herded from place to place. We will be a small group and very informal."

Th. Surmain began advertising their 55 day gourmets' holiday about a month ago. They gave themselves the name "Les Ambassadeurs du Bien Manger," which they felt would be easy for almost anybody to translate into "ambassadors of good eating."

Some 50 Letters
So far they have had some 50 letters, including one from the President of a midwestern university and three from physicians. They are not quite sure whether the doctors see this as a chance to sample the best food and wines in France, or as a golden opportunity to study the effects of people of 55 days of good eating.

The writers have inquired only for more information, but the youthful travel experts feel sure that 12 people, the trip's limit, will sign up to pay $2895 each for the trip.

Well Planned Operations
"Here are the menus," Andre said, opening a file cabinet drawer and pulling out a manila folder filled with neatly-typed menus in French. "We know what each meal will be and what wines will be served with it. Here in Beaune, for instance, in the heart of the Burgundy wine country, we have arranged for a special dinner with the Chevaliers du Tastevin—knights of wine tasting. It's rare for outsiders to be invited to one of these dinners. It will be an eight course meal lasting from 8 p.m. to 2 a.m."

When it's all over and the group returns to Paris for a week before sailing, they'll be invited to go to the cordon bleu cooking school, as guests of the Surmain, to learn to cook the dish they enjoyed the most—providing, of course, they think they'll ever be hungry again.
