Use of Synthetic Material Brings Clothing Revolution

By ELIABETH TOOMEY

New York—(U.P.)—The biggest change in the way we dress has come in the past 10 years not from fashion salons but from laboratories.

Hemlines rise and fall, but the real revolution is the growing use of synthetic fiber fabrics in clothing. Every member of the family is affected. And synthetic materials will reach an all-time peak in popularity this spring.

Entire Easter outfits, excepting shoes and hats, can be dumped in the Monday wash. Little girls can wear sherbet-colored fleece coats that once would have been ridiculously impractical. They go into washing machines now.

Men, traditionally behind women in accepting new fashions, actually have pioneered some of the combinations of man-made fibers and natural fibers used in women's clothes this spring.

Dacron and cotton mixtures went first into men's shirts. Now, after thorough testing in men's wardrobes, the dacron-cotton-materials are being turned into scores of new women's styles.

Paris designers joined the American developers on a large scale for the first time this year to create entire collections from synthetic fiber fabrics. Givenchy designed a separate group of casual clothes made from orlon fabric. Most of his designs will be copied for sale here.

The favorite new way to use the test tube fibers is in combination with various natural fibers. The reason a new cotton blouse may be crisp and shining, for instance, is that it contains 10 per cent nylon.

The reason a man's suit can go through a downpour and dry out without losing its shape or the crease in the pants is because it's part wool and part dacron.

A little girl's coat for spring can be the most fragile looking pastel plaid, with accordion-pleated panels in the skirt and a pale pink lining. It washes. The wool-appearing material is a combination of rayon and orlon, the pleats are permanent and the lining is nylon.

Little boys are naturals for such sturdy fashions. Washable suits, silky-looking shirts made of nylon stretch yarns that fit several sizes and orlon sweaters easy to wash and quick to dry made muddy playgrounds less of a hazard for junior's clothes.

TO MEET

Women of St. Peter's Lutheran church are invited to a devotional meeting at the church Thursday, March 10, at 1 p.m. A business meeting will follow.
