Butte Falls Unit Names Chairmen Meeting Delegate

Butte Falls — Mrs. William Edmondson, chairman of Butte Falls Extension unit, was elected delegate to a child safety conference at the last unit meeting, held at the home of Mrs. Leslie Casey.

The conference will be held at Southern Oregon college, in Ashland, March 25.

The project leaders, Mrs. Roy Price and Mrs. Clyde Moore, demonstrated how to prepare seven different vegetables, including spinach, turnips and broccoli, in new ways. They said the vegetables because of their low calorie content could have rich sauces to increase their attractiveness.

Mrs. Ray Trefren read a research paper on the study of selenium as a trace element which affects the rate of tooth decay.

Mrs. Harvey Dalton explained the scope of the international women's organization, Associated Country Women of the World which is commonly known as ACWW. She said that all home extension women are members of this organization and that the "pennies for friendship" fund pays the costs of sending delegates to the world wide conference held once every three years. The next ACWW conference will be held in Ceylon in 1956.

Mrs. James Arnold read a news letter from one of the girls at Azalea House, Oregon State college, telling about the items of furniture added to the house from funds sent by Oregon extension units. The letter was written in such a way as to give a picture of how the girls at Azalea house live in their college home.

For the spring festival in May, the local unit decided to exhibit copper tooling.

The next meeting will be at the home of Mrs. Earl Remson on Fish Lake road. The subject will be "Simple Home Repairs."

Problems of World Trade Analyzed by League Speaker

Problems of world trade were analyzed by Dr. John W. Swarthout, head of the political science department of Oregon State college, when he spoke to Medford League of Women Voters at a general meeting in the Medford hotel last Saturday.

He summarized Europe's situation by saying: "In Europe there are 27 sovereign countries in an area two thirds the size of the United States. Each country has its own cultural, historical, agricultural, and economic background pattern on which to base its foreign trade policy."

In order to clarify the deeply rooted regional dissension on foreign trade in this country, he used a map of the United States divided into sovereignties, and gave a "non-euclidean history," as he called it, of these fictional countries showing the background and accepted need for control of imports or tariffs, followed by retaliation tariffs.

Dr. Swarthout explained that the accounts in export-import banks can never get out of balance more than 10 percent. When the 10 percent limitation is reached there can be no more trading between those two accounts until the legal balance can be regained.

This is why, he said, Australia cannot buy cars and machinery from the United States because we have a prohibitive tariff on wool, therefore to the extent that it does, Australians drive English cars.

Dr. Swarthout told how countries force others to alter their trade through manipulation of tariffs, thereby demanding certain things of each other that could only be worked out through complicated negotiation.

Dr. Swarthout spoke of the establishment of ITO, International Trade Organization, of the United Nations which had never been accepted by the large powers of the world trade pattern, mainly the United States and the sterling block.

However, from the ITO he said, came the idea of GATT, General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. This organization focuses world thought on the international implication of tariff rates and established a means of multilateral negotiations among the 33 member nations.

As Dr. Swarthout finished speaking without having offered any solution to the need of freer world trade, a lively question and answer period followed.

When asked "What can we do about it?" Dr. Swarthout answered, "I don't know," qualifying this answer with a brief synopsis of the problem facing Japan in the post war world. Japan's natural market, he said, is China, southeast Asia and the United States. Of these three markets, China is closed to trade by the United Nations supervisory council; southeast Asia has adopted protective tariffs in order to encourage its own infant industries, and the United States has closed its tariff doors to protect its labor market from the unbalancing influx of cheap labor produce from Japan.

If Japan cannot trade, it cannot support itself, he said, and, therefore, being a country the size of the state of California with eighty five million people, it must be sustained through a false economy of subsidization.

Dr. Swarthout, pointed out that as long as the United States and other creditor nations maintain parity prices, price determined by the supply, through prohibitive tariffs, Japan and similar countries have no hope of altering their economic status nor their standard of living.

Dr. Swarthout admitted the adjustment would come but it would be a long hard pull through a world educational process. He mentioned UNESCO as an available channel for this. The next general meeting of the League of Women Voters will be the annual meeting, April 30.
