A Nichol's Worth of . . . Comment On This and That

Washington — (U.P.) — To my agent at Camp Desert Rock, near Las Vegas, some rather amusing things have been going on behind the scenes during the current atomic tests.

The lads handling releases to the press, for example, daily cross swords with the wheels in the Atomic Energy Commission. Much of the material is classified, which is proper, of course. But one Army officer had a sign painted for press headquarters which read:

"If it isn't classified, it isn't a story."

My friend didn't say whether the officer got away with his little joke. But the agent did vouch for this one: Army men are known with affection as "dogfaces."

A badge, and there were very few badges.

A Dog's Life
"So help me," my informant said, "one day a hound dog trotted into the forward trench section. Around his neck the pooch wore a completely valid AEC pass—sealed in plastic and with a mug photo showing bared fangs. The badge bore the dog's name and his "organization."

Incidentally, the dogs at Camp Desert Rock don't exactly lead the life of Riley, like they're supposed to in the Army, according to my friend.

Sure the soldiers pet and feed them and welcome them as friends. But the ground is rocky. Combat boots wear out quickly and blisters appear on a man's heels. On the dogs, havoc is played with the paws. The boys tried bandages, but they kept slipping off and wore out too fast.

Marines Need Help
Overnight, the problem was solved. A soldier went to Las Vegas on pass and visited a sporting goods shop. There he bought some of those leather covers that golfers use to protect their woods against the weather. The dogs were pretty happy about it.

The Marines, for once, had to lean on the Army. The Leathernecks arrived at the maneuvers, but the situation was far from in hand. A violent windstorm greeted them and they had a dickens of a time putting up their kitchen tents. Those who tried it found themselves being dragged across the premises trying to hang on to the billowing canvas. When the storm finally let up, the pooped Marines stood aside while Army engineers put up the tents.

The GI, my agent would have you know, called on his ingenuity to solve a problem at the camp. For insulating field ice boxes, the Army used roots of the Yucca plant, native to the area. The boxes were dug into the rocky terrain, leaving only the tops at ground level. A small ice box was fitted into the larger one and the Yucca roots were chopped up and packed between the two for insulation. It worked fine.

As We Live

Jealousy Can't Be Eliminated Entirely

It is certainly true that telling a child ahead of time that there will be a new baby in the family helps cushion the shock. But this is far from enough to ward off jealousy.

(Q) "I just don't understand my son, Stevie. He is three years old and seemed delighted when I told him we were having a new baby. I even told him that he could help me take care of the new baby, and I have kept my word. But there are times when he seems to resent this baby, who is now two months old. He says nasty things about him sometimes, refuses to help me when I need his help, such as getting a towel when I am bathing the baby, and seems very spiteful about all I do for the baby. I thought psychologists claimed that a child would not be jealous if he were prepared ahead of time for a new arrival."

(A) Psychologists do claim that the older child's jealousy will be lessened if there is preparation for a new baby. I know of no psychologist who claims there will be no jealousy at all. In fact, they all maintain that some jealousy in a family is normal and cannot be eliminated any more than it can outside the home, in school, on the playground, or even in the social and business lives of adults.

You have given your son some preparation for the new arrival, but your preparation, as you describe it, was far from adequate. How could Stevie know, with the limited experience of a three-year-old, what it actually meant to have a new baby in a home?

Could he, for example, anticipate how much of your time the new baby would take? Could he realize that he would have to share your attention and love with the new baby? And could he anticipate that he would have to wait for several years before this new baby would be a playmate for him? You painted such a rosy picture for him in your "preparation" that the let-down has been hard for him to understand, much less take.

FISH SPANKS
Sandpoint, Ida.—(U.P.)—Harold Stokke tells of the big fish that spanked him before it got away. He says he hooked a big Kamloop trout in Pend Orielle lake and reeled it in. The fish jumped into the boat, slapped Stokke where spankings are administered, and then flopped back into the lake and swam away.
