Radioactive Rain Blamed on Russia

Tokyo — (U.P.) — A Japanese scientist reported today that radioactive rain which fell in Japan last fall resulted from Russian atomic tests held in Siberia at a site near Japan.

Dr. Haruo Miyake of the Weather Research Institute said weather observation data proved the radioactive rain came from two tests held in mid-September and late October.

He said the rain from Sept. 18-19 in Northern Japan contained radioactivity up to 100,000 clicks a minute per liter.

At the time a typhoon moved into the ocean and a cold air layer moved across Japan from the north. Radioactivity decreased as a result of another typhoon, Miyake said, but increased again after the typhoon passed.
