

Singing, Weeping British Women Greet Evangelist

Plymouth, England — (U.P.) — Evangelist Billy Graham arrived in Britain today to a wild welcome from singing and weeping women. And visiting the spot from which the Mayflower sailed he declared, "I'm a pilgrim father in reverse."

"I've been a little homesick for England ever since I left it," the American evangelist said. "There is something in this country that gets right down deep. There is something here that digs a place in a man's heart."

Hundreds Chant Hymn
A crowd of hundreds, mainly women and girls, chanted the hymn "This Is My Story" and many wept as Graham came ashore from the liner Liberté waving his hat from the bow of a tender and shouting "God bless you."

Police crush barriers held back crowds. Mothers held their babies aloft to see the young preacher who achieved near-phenomenal success with a London revival last year and now has returned for a six-week revival in Scotland.

He opens in Glasgow Monday. The week of May 14-21 he will be back in London to preach at Wembley Stadium, the biggest in Britain.

REMEMBER THIS PICTURE?—The State Department's revelation of the long-secret official records of the 1945 Yalta Big Three conference brings out this famous photo of British Prime Minister Winston Churchill, President Franklin D. Roosevelt and Russian Premier Josef Stalin. The papers revealed details of the deal between Roosevelt and Stalin to bring Russia into the war against Japan. They show that Stalin laid down a set of political demands as his price.

More Strict Gasoline Rationing Seen in Event of New World War

Washington — (U.P.) — Government experts said today that if the United States gets into another major war civilians can expect gasoline rationing to be as tough—and maybe tougher—than in World War II.

Some people have wondered if gasoline might not be more plentiful in the next emergency, what with jet planes being able to use such low-grade fuels as kerosene. Not so, said the experts.

Government planners figure military demands for petroleum products in a new global conflict probably would be even greater than in World War II.

For one thing, American Air Force and Navy jets use fuels based on gasoline, rather than kerosene like the British. And even kerosene comes from the same source as gasoline—crude oil—so that its large-scale use would indirectly affect gasoline supplies.

The experts said jets eat a lot more fuel than the propeller-driven jobs of the last war. And they said it takes still more gasoline and oil to drive cargo planes, tanks, trucks, gun carriers, ships, and the thousands of other fuel-operated implements of war.

Eventual Conversion
It's going to be a long time, for example, before the Navy converts to atom power. It's also expected that planes would be used more than ever before to haul troops and equipment—and this would mean high fuel consumption.

Officials said distributing gasoline to civilians takes manpower and equipment. In the event of a full-scale war, they said it would be advisable to shift as much of this to defense projects as possible, again cutting into civilian supplies.

The Defense Department spokesman said it would take some days to put a new rationing program into effect after a declaration of national emergency. During this time civilians would be able to get supplies from normal sources.

A Nichol's Worth of ... Comment On This and That

By HARMAN W. NICHOLS
United Press Feature Writer

Washington — (U.P.) — I was out for my morning swim in the pool at the Shamrock Hotel in Houston, Tex., and under 10 feet of water whom did I bump into but Mort Cooper, the former right-handed pitcher of the St. Louis Cardinals. "Glad I ran into you," Ol' Mort said.

"I would like to sell you an A-bomb shelter like they probably will be using at that new housing development called Sharpstown here in Houston."

It turned out that Mort is still in there pitching, but now he is a bigger game. He is vice-president of a bomb shelter manufacturing company which dearly loves his name and reputation. Mort has the developers of the new $400,000,000 housing project interested in something that may add up to a bomb cellar in each of the 25,000 units of the new project.

Best part of it, said the big Texan, is that folks in the development can install a shelter for 75 cents a month.

The shelters, according to the former hurler, are being built, with the approval of the government and "no home should be without one."

Mort said that one of these hide-aways can be installed in eight hours, which maybe or maybe not would be fast enough.

The old right-hander dog-paddled away and up came another old pal in the swimming pool. There was T. C. (Buddy) Brennan Jr., who isn't built like a Texan, but talks like one.

He looked pretty sharp in his white swimming gear.

Texas, he let me know, doesn't go in for anything cheap, except when it comes to taking care of Texans. Like in this Sharpstown housing development where you can get three bedrooms with roses all around for $12,000.

"But guess what we've got planned for the poor man's golfer," said Buddy. "For $20 a year a whole family can belong to our country clubs. And not only that, we will have fine eating facilities at restaurant prices."

Buddy Brennan is rightly proud of his boss, Frank Sharp, since Mr. S. has made our lad general manager of a gigantic operation.

"Know what that fellow did?" Buddy said, puffing to the surface in the pool. "Well, see, we were starting this housing thing, which eventually will bed down 87,500 people, and Mr. Sharp looked around and didn't see any trees."

"So what does he do? He goes around the corner a ways and buys himself a small forest. He pulls up all of these trees and transplants them in Sharpstown. Get the idea how we operate in Texas?"
