Russia Declared Trying To Renege On British Orders

London —(U.P.)— Russia is trying to renege on some of its much publicized orders for millions of dollars worth of British goods, official sources said here. The orders were placed in Britain before Soviet Premier Georgi M. Malenkov got booted out along with his policy of advocating more consumer goods to make life easier for the Russian people.

Seen Outcome Of Shift

The attempt to cancel his orders were believed to be an immediate outcome of the shift of priority back to heavy industry and arms production that accompanied the change in command at the Kremlin.

Authoritative sources said orders placed in Britain worth between $14,000,000 and $28,000,000 were believed involved.

The Soviet trade delegation in London, which was quietly purged to reflect the new policy, is working on the cancellations.

Mainly Consumer Goods
The British Board of Trade

said "the Russian trade delegation has told a number of firms that Russian importing agencies wish to cancel or modify orders placed with them." The orders concerned "mainly consumer goods or machinery to make consumer goods," the government agency said.

Russia is now expected to seek more machinery in the West. But she may run into the embargo on shipping strategic goods to the Communists.
