Ghost of Murdered British Stage Actor Seen Again at Door of Adelphi Theater

London — (U.P.) — W. Mac-Queen Pope, historian of the British stage, was hurrying through Bull Inn yard, a shadow lane adjoining the Adelphi theater, when he saw a man approaching from the other end.
The stranger had a frank, open face, somehow oddly familiar. His clothes were old-fashioned — a cloak fluttered from his shoulders and he wore a large slouch hat.

They passed and Pope turned to look back, wondering where he had been that face before.
But the man had vanished.

"You see lots of curious types in London," said Pope. "So I did not think about it again until I ran into a friend who is a high official of the BBC. He said he had seen the same man, in the same place, dressed the same way, 30 years ago."

Famous Case
Now this story has become a postscript to one of the most celebrated cases in the annals of the inexplicable. On Dec. 16, 1897, William Terriss, father of the great Ellaline Terriss and himself one of Britain's leading actors, had chuckled at the premonition of an understudy that he would be murdered.

The understudy Levison Lane, had been so disturbed by a dream in which he saw Terriss dying of stab wounds inside the Adelphi with the cast grouped around him, that he insisted on telling the company about it.

He said he had an eerie feeling that death had become Terriss' companion.

The star only laughed and another member of the company said:

"All understudies dream the star is murdered."

As he left the theater after the matinee, Terriss was confronted by a bit player upset because he had been dropped from the company. Terriss promised he would take him on again for the next play and gave him some coins. With the money, the extra bought a butcher knife.

The Stabbing
That evening, as Terriss and a friend he had met at dinner approached his private door to the theater in Bull Inn Yard, the extra sprang from the shadows and stabbed him.

The friend helped Terriss into the theater. There he died, with the cast grouped around him, exactly as the understudy had dreamed.

The surname of Terriss' companion was—actually—Death!

When Pope heard this bizarre tale, he went back to Bull Inn Yard. The spot at which he had seen the stranger vanish was exactly where Terriss used to enter the Adelphi by his private door.

"I looked up an old portrait," Pope said. "There is no doubt a ghost—the ghost of Terriss."
