A 100-man honor guard raised sabres and a 60-piece band played at Central Airport in one of the most gala receptions accorded a visiting dignitary in years.

Ex-Forestry Dean Planning To Resume Grass Research

Study of Feeding Habits of Chicks May Save Money

Chicago (U.P.)—A University of Chicago psychologist doing research on the development of seeing ability in chickens unexpectedly turned up a clue to their feeding habits that may save money for chick-raisers.

The psychologist, Eckhard Hess, as part of his research gave chicks objects of definite colors, sizes and shapes.

He found they had definite preferences. Nearly all chickens preferred to peck at something orange or red among colors, although a small minority preferred blue. They also had preferences as to size and shape.

There emerged a clue that a chick meal made up of objects following the pattern of color, size and shape shown in the experiments increased the tendency of chicks to peck. By pecking more at the food, they gained weight faster.

The University of Chicago reports, discussing the experiment, said "it would seem from Hess' studies that almost a full week out of the usual 10 to 12 weeks needed to bring chicks to broiler size can be saved if the food is designed to suit their preference."

Glider Flight Over Alps Makes History

Grenoble, France (U.P.)—Two French glider pilots have made history with flights over the snow-covered Alps into Italy, it was announced yesterday.

The Aero Club du Dauphine, which made the announcement, said these were the first such flights ever completed over the treacherous mountains, some of which tower more than 13,000 feet.

The 23-year-old pilots, Jean Poncet and Jean-Louis Perrier, were launched here Monday morning. Rising winds carried them up to an altitude of 17,000 feet, a record for glider pilots in this region.

Both pilots flew single-seaters and landed within 15 minutes of each other about five hours after takeoff.
