

Jordan King And Teacher Wed Today

Amman, Jordan—(U.P.)—Young King Hussein gives the throne of Jordan a schoolteacher queen today in an ancient Moslem ceremony marked by the absence of the bride both from the wedding and the king's reception afterwards.

Hussein, 22-year-old ruler of 1,400,000 Jordanians, followed strict Moslem rites in marrying his 27-year-old cousin, Princess Dina, but there were many 20th century touches including a crooner, Farid El Atrash of Egypt.

Arab custom kept Princess Dina from the ceremony that formally made her queen and from the reception, but at later celebrations she planned to join the king.

The actual wedding was an all-male function at the Amman hilltop palace of Zahran, the red and white marble structure belonging to Hussein's mother.

According to Moslem law King Hussein and the bride's father, Prince Abdel Hamid, were to sign a contract of marriage which made Dina the first of four wives allowed to Hussein by law. It was indicated that Hussein, like his father, would take only one wife.

All Jordan marked the wedding day, from the holy places of Jordanian Jerusalem to the Arab Legion outposts guarding the nation's tense borders with Israel. It was a national holiday and the state broadcasting station doubled its hours on the air to cover all proceedings.

Schools, banks and public institutions closed.

Queen Dina taught English literature and met Hussein in England when he was studying at Eton and she at Oxford.

The honeymoon plans were not made public but court circles said the king may take his bride to Spain during the summer.

Republican Speaker Reviews Party Record; Lauds Senator

The accomplishments of the Republican party on the national level were reviewed by Mrs. Paul Geddes, Roseburg, in a talk before Jackson County Republican Women yesterday noon at the YMCA. Mrs. Geddes is the wife of State Senator Geddes and has been serving as his secretary during the current session of the legislature.

Mrs. Geddes prefaced her talk by praising State Senator Philip B. Lowry, saying his record as a freshman senator is outstanding. "He's well liked and admired, and when he speaks, the senate listens," she said. Mrs. Geddes also said she is proud to be a Republican, proud of the party's accomplishments and that she believes preservation of "what is known as the American way of life depends upon the Republican party; this country is steadily drifting away from individualism towards pure socialism."

Stating that "the facts prove the Republican party has carried out its campaign promises" Mrs. Geddes reviewed foreign policy, the national economy, the labor picture, agriculture and internal security.

Mrs. Geddes said the Republican bi-partisan foreign policy has brought about a new feeling of trust and respect abroad and compared Yalta and Potsdam with the London pact, the Venezuelan conference, the results in Korea and other foreign policy accomplishments of the administration. The speaker added that under the Truman administration, the United States delegates to the United Nations had permitted the UN to become a "sounding board" for the Soviets while the representatives of the Eisenhower administration no longer allowed such tactics.

This country's foreign aid program is now on a basis of helping nations to help themselves, Mrs. Geddes said, and "we no longer pour out aid unadvisedly."

Speaking of the national economy, Mrs. Geddes said the whole tax program had been revised, that a $7 billion cut had been made in the nation's taxes, "the largest saving in tax history." She said this had not benefitted big business only, as the Democrats had charged, but that 70 per cent direct relief to individuals. "The average American family saved $100 in taxes last year as a result of these economies," Mrs. Geddes declared.

The Republican tax program has encouraged new business, she added, and therefore increased employment. Fourteen out of 15 federal tax increases in recent years were made under the Democrats, she said, while 7 out of 10 tax reductions were brought about under the Republican administration.

On the labor picture Mrs. Geddes said last year was "the most peaceful of any recent year" and that it is the policy of the Eisenhower administration to encourage labor and industry to work together to promote a healthy labor situation.

Speaking of internal security, Mrs. Geddes said here the two parties were in sharp contrast and charged that the Truman administration had "protected" the communists. The speaker said that the present administration had reversed this trend, that in the process "some have been hurt" but that this was inevitable.

Reviewing agriculture, Mrs. Geddes declared that it is the administration's policy to have farming practices involved to the point where "farmers can get parity out of the market and not out of your taxes."

She pointed to the end of segregation of races as an outstanding accomplishment under the civil rights program and added that conditions have been "quietly improved" in the capital, in veterans' hospitals and in the armed services.

Mrs. Geddes spoke briefly of the power issue and said "we do not have to be ashamed to be on the side of private power" and added "we won't have the power dams we need if we wait on federal money alone to build them." She added that the Republicans do not want to do away with public power, but neither do they want a monopoly of government in this field.

The speaker also said women are being "given a break" by the Republican party and have had many party appointments. She closed her talk by saying that the party was consistently working for freedom "and the struggle for freedom is more serious than we realize."

During the business session, conducted by Mrs. Stephen G. Nye the by-laws were changed to abolish the board of trustees and to change the tenure of office from two to one year.

Mrs. Walter Brittan and Mrs. E. A. Goff were introduced to newly naturalized citizens of the county. About 70 women attended.
