Estate and Trust Forum Set by Bank

The U. S. National bank will present an estate and trust forum in Medford Thursday night, April 28.

The meeting will begin at 7:30 p.m. at the Jackson hotel, according to Allan F. Perry, manager of the Medford branch, who will preside. Residents of Medford, Grants Pass and the surrounding area are invited to the forum.

Estate planning, management and settlement information will be presented by a four-man team from the bank's head office in Portland. R. M. Alton, vice-president and head of the trust department, will make the opening remarks and introduce the speakers.

The 1955 series marks the sixth year the bank has presented trust forums throughout the state. More than 2,300 persons attended the 16 forums, which the bank presented in 1954.

Portland —(U.P.)— Dr. Henry C. Blair, an orthopedic surgeon and professor, has been elected president of the University of Oregon medical school alumni. He succeeds Dr. Howard C. Stearns.

Back Stairs: Air Conditioned Church

Washington — (U.P.) —Backstairs at the White House:

President Eisenhower's church in Augusta, Ga., the Reid Memorial Presbyterian Church, will be air conditioned this summer. The pastor, Massey Mott Heltzel, says this will not only help Sunday attendance during the torrid months in Augusta, but aid his disposition, too.

When Secretary of State John Foster Dulles left Washington last Sunday to confer in Augusta with Mr. Eisenhower, it was cold in the capital and Dulles wore a heavy, mid-winter tweed suit.

He suffered admittedly while he was in Augusta where the mercury was pushing 90 degrees.

The White House office lobby is seven feet shorter than it was before the chief executive went to Augusta. Mr. Eisenhower returned yesterday to find that in his eighteen days absence, a new wall had been erected in the lobby.

The effect of the new wall, if not the purpose, will be to keep out of plain view of the lobby callers who leave the President's office via a side door. This is the first major alteration to the lobby in about 20 years.

Bursitis or not, the President shot reasonably good golf during his recent stay in Augusta. He had at least one 84 which, for him, is good. Considered against his handicap of 18 strokes, this would have given him a net 66 which is what Masters Champion Cary Middlecoff shot last Saturday— with no handicap.

If Mrs. Eisenhower still is in Gettysburg this week end, the President is sure to join her, even if only for a brief stay.

Watch for the President to drop some new foreign policy material at the annual Associated Press lunch meeting in New York next Monday.

Denver again will be late summer headquarters for Mr. Eisenhower, but not for the eight weeks stay of last year.

Just about the hardest White House souvenir to come by—a golf ball stamped "Mr. President." The Chief Executive gets plenty of these balls as gifts, but they are such good golf balls that he is somewhat loathe to give them away.

Mr. Eisenhower was the hero of Western Union during his recent stay in Georgia.

The Western Union wires for the White House staff, set up in the Bon Air Hotel, handled close to 200,000 words of news copy during the course of the eight-day trip. This wordage total is remarkable in that it shows the trip was far from a total vacation.

Fewer reporters than usual accompanied Mr. Eisenhower to Augusta and they apparently made up in big stories what they lacked in number of colleagues.
