Two Hardy Fliers Crossing Pacific in Small Airplane

Honolulu — (UP) — Two hardy fliers landed in Honolulu early Saturday completing the first leg of a flight to Tokyo in a light, private plane which has a normal cruising range of 780 miles.

The pilot, Jack Ford, president of Fleetway, Inc., of Burbank, Calif., and unidentified co-pilot, stepped from the twin-engine Beechcraft 14 hours and 10 minutes after they took off from San Francisco's International airport.

Airport officials were amazed. Ford's flight plan, filed in San Francisco called for a fraction under 14 hours flying time for the trip. He missed it by less than 15 minutes.

The plane carried fuel in extra tanks, giving it 15½ hours flying time.

Ford said that as far as he knows, the projected trip to Japan is unique for so small a craft. However such trips are routine over the Atlantic, he said. Ford is delivering the plane to its new owner.

Ford said he set his company up in 1947 to ferry airplanes anywhere in the world.
