Back Stairs: Banquet Season Nears End

By MERRIMAN SMITH
United Press
White House Writer

Washington — (U.P.)—Back stairs at the White House:

President Eisenhower is happy to see the local banquet season drawing to a close. He is no devotee of rich food and late evenings.

In this waning 1954-55 banquet and convention season, the President has made it an increasing practice to pass up the meal itself and "drop in" on a gathering for a brief speech after the guests have eaten.

His last major social function of this season will be the Gridiron Club dinner the night of May 7. For that one, he'll arrive early and stay late.

When former President Truman was here recently, he was dining at the Mayflower Hotel where he spotted Columnist Drew Pearson, a frequent object of presidential wrath when Mr. Truman was in office.

The ex-president on this occasion, however, sent a note of personal greetings to Pearson across the dining room. Mr. Truman later told friends he "now" finds the columnist a fine fellow.

This has been typical of other past presidents. Once they are out of office, out of the range of critical fire, they can be downright friendly toward former adversaries and critics. Maybe it is the mellowing influence of age.

Some of the more vocal White House reporters are becoming recognizable figures in thousands of households across the nation due to the telecasts of Mr. Eisenhower's press conferences.

A reporter who questions the President frequently was absent from a recent conference and quickly received mail inquiries, asking why he was missing.

And "Backstairs" recently received this hard-to-evaluate note from Mrs. S. D. Jackson of Johnson City, Tenn.: "I enjoy seeing you on TV always sitting behind the President, looking like you did not know much, but I always know that when you speak, you will have something to say."

Mrs. Jackson, thank you, I guess.

Historical note: Where Mr. Eisenhower now practices golf shots on the south lawn of the White House, there grazed a herd of sheep during the Wilson administration.

Contemporary accounts say that ice cream was first served in the White House by Dolly Madison. Some of the men who tried the frozen dessert for the first time put down their dishes in hasty alarm and asked to be served straight whiskey. According to historian Catherine Frances Cavanagh, the men said they needed a straight shot to ward off colic.

Business Bureau Warns of Peddlers

Portland—The Portland Better Business bureau today warned Oregon residents against being bilked by itinerant peddlers and fake horticultural experts. Lyle Janz, manager of the bureau, reported that many complaints have been received concerning purchases of "fine top soil" which turns out to be "refuse soil," fly-by-night operators selling trees at "bargain" prices, and fake tree doctors. It was recommended that those having doubts about the men or experts should contact reliability of door to door salesmen or experts should contact their local chamber of commerce.

Honolulu, T.H.—(U.P.)—News photographer Gordon Morse of the Honolulu Advertiser wasn't too excited when two of his three children won local baby contests. The prizes awarded were free photos of his children.
