

Perjury Trial of Left-Wing Labor Leader Has Flareup

San Francisco — (U.P.) — The perjury trial of left-wing labor leader Hugh Bryson was punctuated with flareups Friday as Federal Judge William C. Mathes of Los Angeles bickered with attorneys for both sides.

Bryson, former president of the defunct National Marine Cooks and Stewards Union, is charged with falsely stating in a Taft-Hartley law affidavit that he was not a Communist, or was not affiliated with the group.

Asked for Mistrial
Mathes first clashed with attorneys for Bryson, who asked for a mistrial because they were being "harassed and threatened" by the court. The judge denied the motion, cutting off attorney George R. Andrews's lengthy arguments before they were completed.

The angry Andrews quickly asked that the record show "I did not conclude my statements because of the threatening tone of the court."

Counsel Under Fire
The government counsel, Robert Schnacke, came under fire when the court ordered him to complete a search of records in Washington to verify Bryson's shipping papers during 1936 and 1937 before restating the government case.

Schnacke protested such an investigation would be lengthy and it "might mean the government could not rest for two or three weeks."

Maths drily observed, "If it is going to take two or three weeks, I'll entertain a motion to miss for want of prosecution, and with that he recessed the court for the week end."

Eagle Point Grange

Fancy Work chairman, Rosa Smith, reported two finished dish towels and two sets of pillow cases were turned in to that committee.

Mrs. Edith Poe told of the different contests open to women and young folks of the Grange and that the sewing contest entries should be turned in during May as these have to go to the State Grange convention to be held in June, but that the canning contest entries need not be in until the last of October. She also suggested a visitation program such as the one being carried on in the Grange, be started for the H.E.C.

It was reported that Gladys Ragsdale was home and recovering nicely from a recent operation. Everyone enjoyed seeing Rosa Smith and Goldy Chamberlain back to club again after recent illnesses.

Next H.E.C. meeting will be on May 25 at Ruby Stowell's with Opal Waddell as co-hostess.
