Out-Patients Service For Psychiatric Cases New in San Francisco

San Francisco — (U.P.) — San Francisco's City and County Hospital now boasts an out-patient service by psychiatrists for persons suffering mild mental illness.

Thomas A. Brooks, chief administrative officer, said the no-cost service is provided by city psychiatrists and public health nurses. It offers at-home treatment for victims of mild insanity and also recuperation treatment for those released to their homes.

The service provides a buffer for those needing care short of hospitalization and will cushion the shock of abrupt transfers from hospital wards to the outside world, Brooks said.

The out-patient service will operate in conjunction with the city's psychiatric wards which already provide temporary treatment for mental patients.
