Little Change Seen In Insects Over Last 220,000,000 Years

By DELOS SMITH
United Press Science Editor
New York—(U.P.)—Now that spring is in full bloom and people are energetically "exterminating" insects, it may relax people to learn that the insects have been around for at least 220,000,000 years. People have been around for only 1,000,000 years or so.

Furthermore, if a mosquito or a beetle or a fly or ant of today should meet up with a mosquito, beetle, fly or ant of 25,000,000 years ago, he'd have to recognize him as a brother, but if a man met up with a man of 1,000,000 years ago, he'd run in fright from such a monster.

Dr. Reginald D. Manwell, professor of zoology, Syracuse University, and an authority on the "insect Pompeii" near Florissant, Colo., indicated that people have no call for being stuffy toward insects. He reserved judgment on who was going to exterminate whom in the long run.

Carcasses Fossilized
This "Pompeii" occurred just about 25,000,000 years ago. The earth was heaving up the Rocky Mountains. A series of volcanic explosions produced the dust which snuffed out the lives of uncountable myriads of insects, and a fortuitous series of circumstances fossilized their carcasses in shale.

The same kind of thing happened around Mount Vesuvius in 79 A.D. but it was the city of Pompeii and its inhabitants which were buried and preserved to satisfy the curiosity of those who came later. At Florissant, Manwell and other scientists have found out about the insects of, as Manwell put it, "a time so long ago that we cannot even call it a forgotten epoch."

A startling thing is that the insects then were very much like the insects now—indeed, you can go so far as to say many of them were identical. "Not only have insects apparently undergone little structural change in many millions of years," said Prof. Manwell in a publication of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, "but also their habits, at least in many cases, remain much the same."

Man Not Around
Man wasn't around then, of course, since he then was some 24,000,000 years in the future. But man is a mammal and the mammals who were around are now in the main extinct and those which are not extinct, have evolved into very different forms.

The coal-forming period of time which ended 220,000,000 years ago has left indisputable evidence of how long insects have been around. But life itself, the professor said, "is a kind of clock and, like all clocks, refers only to the present, but has meaning only in terms of the past, since the future cannot be known."

for the insect world, for mammals, or even for man, the records of past ages only hint."

Around Hollywood

Hollywood — (U.P.) — I believe that whatever success an actor or actress achieves in motion pictures is attributable to the fact they never quite grew up. In my opinion, the convincing performance, intimately projected on the screen, comes directly from the performer's ability to sublimate his real-life personality into the character he is called upon to portray.

I feel whatever success I have achieved is due to the fact I've never quite grown up — that I still have the same faculty a kid has in playing cops and robbers, or cowboys and Indians — to forget I'm playing a part and to actually feel that I AM the person the script calls for.

Take an average adult business man and say to him: "We'd like you to grow a beard, dress up in a short skirt, and go running all over the Italian countryside with a bow and arrow and a spear and play Ulysses."

I guarantee you, he'd blush a little, stammer a polite refusal and then probably get pretty mad that you'd even ask him to do such a thing. Yet when Paramount approached me to play the title role in "Ulysses" opposite Silvana Mangano, the kid in me made me jump at the chance.

Here was a chance to portray one of the great heroes of the world's literary history; a chance to swashbuckle all over the place — to fight a giant, to battle the elements at sea, to sack the city of Troy — and to make movie love to a couple of beautiful women.

Well, what actor could refuse such an opportunity — any more than one of my young sons could refuse a chance to put on a cowboy hat and his six-gun cap pistols and go galloping out of the house to play cowboy.

And playing the part gave me deep satisfaction because for weeks I had to live and be the great Greek warrior. Vicariously I obtained the same thrill Ulysses himself must have felt at the successful conclusion of his heroic deeds.

To me it is a wonderful thing to be able to do this — aside from the fact that it has made me a handsome living as an actor.

I loved playing the role, just as a kid gets a kick out of shouting "Bang, Bang," and slaying an imaginary redskin. I believed I was Ulysses just as the kid thoroughly believes he is Davey Crockett when he puts on a coon-skin cap.
