All Newlyweds Face Adjustment Problems

Dr. Hurlock

It is, of course, assumed that these will be months of blissful happiness. Far too often, unfortunately, they are not. Frictions arise, quarrels result, and both the bride and groom suffer hurt feelings. Then days of doubt and disillusionment are likely to follow, when both young people begin to wonder whether they made a mistake. There are certain causes of these frictions which are almost inevitable and so universal that few young people escape them. Knowing ahead of time that they are likely to occur may go a long way toward forestalling them or certainly of preparing the young people to handle them better.

1. Money problems. Even when a wife continues to work, there will be heavy expenses involved in setting up housekeeping. Everything that is bought should be considered carefully first. Entertainment should be kept to a minimum until bills for necessary items are paid.

Must Divide Time

Time problems. On the honeymoon, the bridegroom can give his undivided attention to the bride. But when the honeymoon is over, his time will have to be divided between her and his job. Furthermore, he will doubtless want to continue some of the activities he has enjoyed with his men friends. This, too, will cut into their time together.

3. In-law problems. Every young wife or husband who has a family will want to see them occasionally. It is never fair for the family on one side to monopolize the young people's time. If the two families can be brought together for special occasions, neither will feel left out.

LETTERS FROM READERS

Vacation Time: "If one has a choice, which is better, a vacation at the beginning or the end of summer?"

(A) It always seems to me that a vacation at the end of summer is better. In the first place, all members of the family are then rested and ready to start back to work or school. After the heat of the summer, most of the good effects of an early vacation are lost. In the second place, it is always difficult to hear people talk about going away on a vacation when one's vacation is a thing of the past. The psychological effect of this is more damaging than the physical drain of the heat of the summer, waiting for a vacation at the end.

Talkers: "Some people talk so much that no one else has a chance to say a word. Don't they realize how tiresome they are?"

(A) If a person realized how tiresome he was when monopolizing the conversation, I am sure he wouldn't do it. The person who tries to do all the talking is usually such a self-centered, selfish person that he does not stop to think of others.

Reading: "There is so much talk today about people's not reading since television came out. I think that television stimulates an interest in different things and encourages people to read about these things."

(A) Some people are encouraged to read about things that have interested them on television, but many are not. If time is limited, one must make a choice between reading and television. As television is easier more relaxing, and often more exciting than reading, many people are substituting television watching for the time they formerly spent in reading. This is especially true of children.

Educator Says Women Better As Helpmates

Syracuse, N. Y. —(U.P.)— One woman educator says it's time the girls stopped trying to be man's equal.

"A glance at history shows that woman was at her best when she strove to be man's helpmate," said Miss Margaret C. Snyder, dean of women at Le Moyne College, in a recent discussion of the question, "Is it a woman's world?"

"It is a woman's world if she realizes her part is not to rule and govern but to inspire," said she. "But woman must first abandon her spirit of exaggerated competition with man. She must renounce her spirit of influencing man through mere physical attractiveness."

"The modern feminist movement was too extreme. The movement did recapture some of woman's dignity as a person, but she lost sight of something more important—that she is by nature a helpmate to man."

"Modern woman went on trying to get rather than trying to give."

Dean Snyder said the task of modern woman is this: "While retaining her dignity

Stars' Designer Says Basic Budget

Wardrobe Need Cost No More than $200

By ALINE MOSBY United Press Correspondent

Hollywood — (U.P.) — Women don't need the bulging bank book of a movie queen to dress as smartly as one, Don Loper, the reigning designer for the film stars, declared.

A budget of $200 to $500 is enough, he said. The couturier is famous for whipping up exotic creations costing from $200 to $2,000 for such luminaries as Dinah Shore, Joan Crawford and Lucille Ball. Yet get Loper out of hearing of his rich customers and he will tell you, "good taste can be had for any price."

Loper said a woman needs two things for a good wardrobe: time to shop, and the will power to buy ONLY the exact outfit she wants. Don't settle for a wild substitute.

Black Always Good

Loper outlined a basic wardrobe that he believes will make any woman as well-dressed as society belles or cinema stars. It is basically black. When a woman cannot afford many clothes, he says, she is safer to stick to black, "which is always smart."

This is Loper's year-round "basic."

1. A black-and-white tweed suit with a narrow skirt. A fitted jacket is fine but a box jacket can be used as a separate jacket. The suit is "perfect for traveling, lunches, shopping, informal restaurant dinners," says Loper.

2. A basic black wool or crepe dress with a high unadorned neckline, long, wrist-length sleeves and a narrow skirt. Add pearls, small black hat and white gloves and "you're as perfectly dressed for cocktails or dinner as any film star," said Loper. Collars, gold costume jewelry or mink collar and cuffs are other suggestions.

Patent leather belt and shoes give the black dress a spring touch. The tweed jacket over as a person, she must restore this essentially feminine role of helping and inspiring man.

"All of her physical characteristics—intuition, devotedness—center her own life around others and equip her for her role as a helpmate to man."

Ripe olives and a tangy mashed avocado spread to go on potato chips will keep your barbecue guests happy as they watch the food being cooked over glowing charcoal.

5. A black cashmere sweater to wear with the tweed skirt plus the mink collar and cuffs for another cocktail outfit.

Shoes should be plain black pumps only, insists Loper. Inexpensive small hat-bar hats are approved by the famed designer. For housewives, add cotton house dresses; for career girls, add plain skirt and blouses for the office.

"And you have a basic wardrobe—this is all a woman needs," declared Loper. "You can buy all that (or have it made) for $200 or $500, depending on the fabrics."
