Buried Treasure by Pinkney Gage

Buffalo Gun Probably Heaviest Rifle Ever Made

Jim opened the action, raised the gun and looked down the barrel. After nearly a half minute of critical study he handed the weapon over to me.

It was a buffalo gun, the biggest the Sharps Rifle Co. ever made and very likely the heaviest piece of shoulder artillery ever used by man. Because it emoloyed a 700 grain bullet—better than an ounce and a half of lead—it would serve to knock over an elephant or a mastodon with equal ease.

"Look at these cartridges," said Jim passing me one. As I recalled other Sharps rifles, they used paper or linen cartridges, but this one was of brass, the case being better than three inches long—just the case, mind you. In my mind's eye I could see the huge cloud of smoke that just a few shots from these black powder-charged shells would throw around one.

"I haven't fired it for over 30 years," the owner said. "But it's clean, and it shoots true."

"Well, I'll buy it," said Jim.

I didn't try to dissuade him, but somehow it was difficult to see his surviving the kick of that heavy buffalo gun, and I told him so as we got into the car.

"You're absolutely right," he said. "I'll never fire it. In fact, I never intended to. A rifle in this condition with 50 rounds of ammo, which I can reload, is easily worth $350 of any man's money, and that's what I'm going to get for it."

STAMPS BOUGHT FOR GAG NOW HAVE NICE PRICE TAG

Ned picked up a sheet of stamps and handed it to me.

"I just bought a collection," he said. "Here it is."

There were a hundred stamps in the sheet. The item was the four-cent, orange - brown and black number that carries a picture of one of the funny looking electric automobiles so popular with daring old ladies at the turn of the century.

"But how do you mean this is a collection?" I asked.

"About an hour ago," he said, "an old fellow brought this in and wanted to sell it.

"It seems that back around 1901, when these stamps were brought out to commemorate the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, his sister had purchased an electric brougham.

"It miffed the boy somewhat. In fact, it still seems to slightly. He wanted her to get a Stanley Steamer. Anyway, she liked her electric auto so much, and it seemed so silly to him, he thought it would be a good gag to advertise it as much as possible. So he went out and bought her a couple of sheets of these stamps so that every letter they sent out would carry a picture of the kind of a car she had bought.

"Well, they didn't use up but one sheet on the project, and this one got put away. So carefully that he didn't come across it until last week."

"This is a good deal for me as it is," Ned said. "I paid him $600 for this sheet which catalogues at $875.

"But why couldn't he have been just a little luckier! If the auto on these stamps were inverted, then it would really be something. Why just one stamp with the inverted cented is worth $1100. So $100 of them in a sheet would be worth more than $110,000."

DEALER MAKES NICE PROFIT ON ARMCHAIR, OTTOMAN

My curiosity was naturally aroused by the sight of a battered armchair and an old ottoman with the springs sticking out of it.

"Not bad, eh," my friend said. "I picked them up for $3.50 in a salvage shop."

The armchair was of a walnut with grape carvings on the top of the oval back and arms. The wood was dented here and there, and one of the legs was splintered quite badly, though fortunately the splinter was still attached. There was also a bad gouge in the serpentine front.

It had been covered in a soft blue satin, pieces of which were still visible here and there. So was the ottoman, evidently a companion piece since its style was the same, as well as the treatment it had received in its 70 or 80 years.

I asked if he though he could do very much in restoring them, enough to make it worth his while.

"In a couple of months you won't recognize them," he said.

When I called on him later, they were prominently displayed in his shop. I positively identified them by the gouge on the chair's serpentine front, though it would not have been noticeable except to one who knew where to look.

The price tag for the two was $175.

"I want to move it fast," my friend said. "Hence the low price, but there will still be plenty of profit in it. Labor and materials together came to only $63."

Local CAP Cadet Chosen for Camp

Cadet Lt. Janice Stevens of the Medford squadron of the Civil Air patrol has been selected to attend the CAP two-week summer encampment at Lackland Air Force base, Texas.

Miss Stevens, who is one of two cadets from Oregon attending the encampment, will leave June 18. She received her orders from the Oregon wing of the CAP in Portland.

The summer encampment is for cadets from CAP wings throughout the country who are chosen for their outstanding records as CAP members.

Miss Stevens graduated from Phoenix High school earlier this month.

Air Force Reservists To Attend Conference

An Air Force reserve conference will be held in Vancouver, Wash., June 18-19, according to Capt. Donald P. Hemingway, Air Force liaison officer for the 9417th air reserve squadron here.

Problems of the Air Force reserve will be discussed, Capt. Hemingway stated. Members of the Medford Air Force reserve who will attend are Col. Elmer H. Stambaugh, Maj. Robert E. Nelson, Maj. Maxwell P. Guiley, Maj. Manville M. Heisel, Maj. W. G. Beard, and Capt. William A. Sallade.

The two local Air Force liason personnel will also attend. They are Captain Hemingway and T/Sgt. Walter S. Kistner.
