

Today and Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

I. THE TEN YEARS OF THE UN

There would be no such celebration, as the world will be seeing next week in San Francisco, if in these ten years the United Nations had not proved themselves to be a universal and indispensable institution. Nothing that can be said by the statesmen who will be there is so eloquent as the fact that these statesmen are there—that no government would have dared, to refuse to come. There are still many governments waiting, hoping, and working to be admitted into the United Nations. There is none that would like to resign.

Walter Lippmann

Among those who follow these things there are, to be sure, few in any country who are not critical of this or that in the organization or in the specific acts of the United Nations. There are, likewise, few Americans who agree with all the policies and actions of the American government. But those who would like to leave the United Nations, or wish to see the society dissolved, are no more than an eccentric minority.

NO MEMBER has threatened to resign if it could not prevail. And none has been threatened with expulsion if it did not conform to the views of the others. This reflects, I believe, something new in human history, and something of great significance: namely, the presence throughout mankind of a will that the sovereign governments shall preserve the universal society.

This sentiment, so imponderable and yet so compelling, is not due to the triumphs of the United Nations in the specific and hard questions that have been put to them. The United Nations have not solved all their problems; not by any means. The general human will to maintain the United Nations is due to the feeling, almost one might say to the instinct, of the great masses of mankind that beyond and above the cold war, the ideological war, the armaments race, and the revolutions, there is a supreme and universal human interest. This supreme and universal human interest is that issues must never be let reach a point where conflict is irreparable and inexpiable. For humanity has rights that mankind must compel all governments to respect and to defend.

SO far, so good. But the good part didn't go far enough. June 9 was rainy and chilly and altogether miserable in London. "Queen's weather," they called it. They called it that because as a matter of record it has rained for nearly all important events in Elizabeth's three-year reign.

THAT unleashes an idea. If, as seems not too improbable at this near-middle of June, in this so far very dry year of 1955, we are passing out of a wet cycle and entering upon a dry cycle, maybe we'd better invite Queen Elizabeth out to spend some time with us here in the West. While she was here, we would naturally put on some big affairs for her.

Maybe her weather jinx would follow her and it would rain HARD on every day when something special was planned for her honor and benefit. At least, it's a thought.

SPEAKING of birthdays, Seth Bullis sprung a fast one on me in Medford the other day. He said: "I'll bet you a dollar I can name the number of birthdays you've had."

I fell for it. "Here's the dollar," I said, holding up a dollar bill. "Produce!" "You've had ONE birthday," he said. "All the other occasions have been ANNIVERSARIES."

THE chairman of the senate foreign relations committee—wise and patriotic old Senator Walter George of Georgia—called the other day for greatly expanded trade between Japan and Red China.

He said it's the only way to insure a prosperous Japan and at the same time avoid hard feeling and ill will between Japan and the United States.

In The Day's News

By FRANK JENKINS

Queen Elizabeth of Britain faced an interesting situation this year in regard to her birthday. The actual, honest-to-goodness date of her birth is April 21. But this year her subjects—especially those engaged in business in London—wanted a very special celebration of their queen's birthday, one that would fill the streets with happy people (who might, as an afterthought, of course, go into the stores and buy something.)

But—April hadn't been so good in the way of weather in past years. If crowds are to be happy (and, maybe, in a spending mood) they need sunshine to be happy in. Particularly in England, which hasn't too much sunshine in the course of a year. So they decided to name June 9 as the OFFICIAL birthday anniversary of their beloved queen this year.

SO far, so good. But the good part didn't go far enough.

June 9 was rainy and chilly and altogether miserable in London. "Queen's weather," they called it. They called it that because as a matter of record it has rained for nearly all important events in Elizabeth's three-year reign.

JUST offhand, the idea scares us. Trade is a great builder of friendship. If Japan builds up a big trade with Red China there is always the chance that an understanding might develop between Japan and Communist China that might ripen into an alliance.

Japan has to trade in order to live. If we don't let her trade with us, we'll either have to keep her going with foreign aid or see her go under. If Japan goes through the wringer, she won't be much good to us as an ally in the Pacific.

John Sutton's Wife Awarded Divorce

Hollywood — (U.P.) — Blonde former actress Roberta Sutton won a divorce Wednesday from British actor John Sutton, whom she accused of striking her when he had too much to drink.

The actress, who married Sutton in Las Vegas, Nev., Oct. 22, 1946, said he became "very belligerent and sarcastic" towards her when he had been drinking, which she charged was "quite often."

Maritime Union Negotiations Collapse

New York — (U.P.) — Negotiations between the CIO National Maritime union and 62 tanker, dry cargo and passenger ship companies broke down early today, tying up more than 600 ships.

A spokesman for 22 tanker companies reported talks were suspended when the union persisted in demanding unemployment insurance benefits for seamen who voluntarily leave their employment. Negotiations with 40 other companies collapsed a few hours later.

Calling Cat Brings Complaint To Police

Seattle, Wash. — (U.P.) — A puzzled policeman couldn't see what was wrong when an unidentified woman telephoned to complain that a neighbor was calling his cat every half hour. "He doesn't have a cat," the woman explained.

Liquor License Forms Proved Too Complex

Boulder, Colo. — (U.P.) — Virgil Pearson proved that legal forms for obtaining a liquor license are too complex when he submitted a petition favoring his application to the county commission. Thirty citizens signed the petition Wednesday, which in fine print requested that each signer be "publicly hanged by the neck until dead, June 19th, 10 a.m., in the court house square."

MOLOTOV GOING WEST—Russian Foreign Minister V. M. Molotov, stony-faced apostle of Soviet foreign policy, uses a "mike" to address newsmen as he arrives in New York. He is on his way to San Francisco for the 10th anniversary session of the United Nations. His arrival was one day before the Western Big Three assembled in New York to reforge their united front. At left is Georgi Zarubin, Russian ambassador to the United States. In center is an unidentified interpreter.

LESS FORGETFUL—Detroit — (U.P.) — The number of motorists locking their keys in their cars dropped in 1954. The American Automobile Club reported its annual survey of emergency calls showed only 717,000 calls for emergency lock and key service compared to 803,000 the year before.

BURELSON'S

HOW TO RAISE A FATHER

When properly trained, fathers can be loads of fun. It's terribly important to make them feel needed. Give them constant attention so they won't be driven to TV or their favorite sports page. A toy to be mended, a story to be told, a drink to be fetched—these little things mean a lot.

On Father's Day it's not necessary to spoil him with sport cars or sailboats or power saws. But don't carry this too far: a happy compromise would be something by Fabergé.

The most successful fathers are brought up on Fabergé toiletries for men... "Aphrodisia" if he says he's sophisticated, "Woodhuc" if he sometimes wishes he lived in a tent. You'll find these father-type goodies—Men's Lotion and Talc—at
