Time Not Ripe for World Government, UN Secretary Tells Stanford Graduates

Stanford, Calif. —(U.P.)— U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold told graduating Stanford seniors yesterday that world organization is undoubtedly needed, but "we are far from ripe for world government."

The Swedish diplomat also declared that efforts of politically submerged nations to form independent states should be greeted "with enthusiasm and understanding" by larger and older nations.

Hammarskjold was the main speaker at Stanford's commencement exercises.

Hammarskjold endorsed the United Nations as a body which can solve the problem of reconciling strong national feeling with international cooperation for peace.

Citizen Of World

"Everybody today, with part of his being, belongs to one country, with its specific traditions and problems, while with another part he has become a citizen of a world which no longer permits national isolation," he said.

"Seen in this light, there could not be any conflict between nationalism and internationalism, between the nation and the world . . ."

But, Hammarskjold said, even modest attempts at regional integration have encountered difficulties "because the peoples want to know in whose hands they put their fate."

"Nationalism which reflects a determination to shape one's own fate and to take responsibility for it" is an asset, he said. But he labelled it a liability when nationalism "blinds our eyes to the necessity of that degree of international organization which has become necessary to national life."

Fresh Thinking On Problems

He declared that the 10th U.N. anniversary session in San Francisco this week will be "an occasion for fresh thinking about the problems of our world."

"The United Nations," he said, "is an expression of our will to find a synthesis between the nation and the world. Whatever may be the past shortcomings in world organization, it gives sense and direction to the efforts of all men who are striving towards a better world."

Oregon City ONG Wins Camp Awards

Fort Lewis, Wash. — (U.P.) — A National Guard mortar company from Oregon City, Ore., walked away with several trophies at the guard's encampment here over the week end.

More than 8000 Oregon and Washington men of the Sunset division marched in parade Saturday to mark the closing of the first week of summer camp.

The Oregon City company, commanded by Capt. Willmar C. Stender, shared the Eisenhower trophy with the 41st reconnaissance company from Bremerton, Wash. The Oregon mortarmen also won the 41st infantry division association trophy for outstanding service in competition with guard units from Oregon and Washington.

Saturday's review was attended by Washington's Gov. Arthur B. Langlie and Maj. Gen. Thomas E. Rilea, adjutant general of Oregon, representing Oregon Gov. Paul Patterson.
