Helen Keller Finds Being Deaf Greater Handicap Than Blindness Throughout Life

By ROBERT ZIMMERMANN United Press Correspondent Easton, Conn. —(AP)— Helen Keller, who will be 75 Monday, has concluded after a lifetime in silence and darkness that to be deaf is a greater affliction than to be blind.

She says she might have devoted more time to working for the deaf if she had her life to live over again.

Miss Keller, cheerful, curious, and young in spirit though her brown hair is graying, met reporters for a pre-birthday interview in the living room of her rambling colonial home 50 miles from New York.

"Deafness in a way is harder than blindness," she said. "Hearing is the soul of knowledge and information of a high order. To be cut off from hearing is to be isolated indeed."

Miss Keller, deaf and blind since infancy, just returned from a five-month, 40,000-mile tour around the world under auspices of the American Foundation for the Overseas Blind. Through trips like this, and her writing, she has made herself an inspiration to blind people and the deaf-blind in every country of the world.

"When I was young the question of helping the blind came up first," she recalled. "I wanted to work, and I cast my lot with the blind. I imagine if I had been given a choice I would have taken up work for the deaf first."

She said it happens that the deaf can be employed more easily than the blind. It is necessary to point up the abilities of the blind before they can get a job.

Miss Keller plans only the smallest of birthday parties. Her household includes Polly Thomson, a companion of many years who serves as her eyes and ears, and a German Shepherd named "Et Tu" who came to Miss Keller after flunking out of seeing-eye school because he was subject to car sickness.

For the interview Miss Thomson transmitted questions to Miss Keller by rapid finger movements in the palm of her hand. Miss Keller answered in the slow unmodulated voice she taught herself without ever hearing human speech.

Though Miss Keller was born June 27, 1880, at Tuscumbia, Ala., she does not regard that date as a real birthday.

"The true birthday of the soul is when it comes to find the courage to break away from the dark and silence and to make a new life approaching normality," she said.

This event, for her, was March 3, 1887, when she was seven and Anne Sullivan, a girl of 20, came to her home as a teacher. Miss Keller had lost her sight and hearing as a baby. Miss Sullivan stayed with her until her death in 1936.

Miss Keller's biography of Anne Sullivan will be published in the fall. The book had to be written twice. It was completed once before but the manuscript and all Miss Keller's notes were lost when her home was destroyed by fire in 1946.

The book has been rewritten, the home rebuilt, and Miss Keller is looking forward to many more active years.

"Retirement?" she said. "I dislike the word. I will continue as long as I can whatever work I am able to do. I shall find every possible way to raise money for the deaf and blind. It is truly pitiful—there is so very much still needed before
