RIGHT AFTER HE SIGNED THE LEASE, UP GOES A 50-STORY BUILDING NEXT DOOR— AND THE VIEW—GOING, GOING, GONE!

As We Live

By ELIZABETH HURLOCK, PH.D.

Here is a case where religious guidance is called for:

(Q) "I have been married years and have no children. Recently, where I work, I got to know a married man who is separated from his wife. He told me he would never get a divorce because he doesn't approve of divorce and he couldn't afford to support two families. I was infatuated with him and had an affair. Now I am pregnant. When I told him he left town, and I haven't heard a word from him since. My husband is so happy about the baby and never suspects it isn't his. His whole family is delighted, too. Should I tell my husband that the baby isn't his, and should I tell my doctor?"

(A) The first thing you should do is to talk to a religious leader of your faith, either your own pastor or one in another city, if you prefer to tell someone who doesn't know the people involved.

Do not tell anyone else of your suspicions until you have first got your self straightened out with the help of religious guidance. You do not appear to realize the gravity of what you have done believe that it is his. However, what you do eventually will be up to your own conscience. Follow the advice of your religious counselor. Your "infatuation" with this worthless man has put you in a position of hurting a great many people who evidently hold you dear. Should you decide to keep your secret, accept religious guidance to build up your respect for yourself and to make yourself deserving of theirs. (Copyright 1955, General Features Corp.)
