Baptists to Hold Work Meeting For Missionaries

An all church missionary fellowship meeting will be held at First Baptist church, Wednesday, June 29, at 7:30 p.m. It will start with work groups. The children, under the direction of Mrs. Don Zimmers and Mrs. Melvin Johnson, will prepare old Christmas cards for the mission field while the young people, under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Clemens, will cut quilt blocks and roll bandages. The men, assisted by their wives, will wrap packages for mailing and also roll bandages.

After this work period all groups will unite in singing under the direction of the young people of the church and then view a new film just released by the Conservative Baptist Foreign Mission society depicting the religious life of Japan today. This film is entitled "Into His Marvelous Light." It not only shows the strong hold of Shintoism, Buddhism, nationalism and communism, but also gives an inside picture of Japanese receiving the word of God, it said.

Professionally produced by Missions Visualized of Hollywood, "Into His Marvelous Light" is a documentary picture filmed in Japan for the Conservative Baptist Foreign Mission society. It shows a number of their workers in various types of missionary activity among the Japanese people.

Gorsline Missionary circle of the church will prepare a Christmas tree with ornaments and lights, and every one attending the fellowship gathering is reminded to take missionary gifts. Missionaries in the foreign fields of Africa, Japan, Alaska and other countries are counting on gifts for Christmas, and these must be collected here in June. Those without gift lists are reminded that children are the same everywhere and are asked to take any toy, game or doll to put under the tree.

The evening will close with refreshments served by the church social committee. Everyone interested in missions are invited and welcome to come.

Fishermen's Wives Organize; 'Fighting Mad' Over Prices

By ELIZABETH TOOMEY
United Press Correspondent
Seattle — (U.P.) —

The wives of the halibut fishermen are fighting mad. Gill netters' wives and tuna fishermen's wives are pretty incensed too.

Any woman who has seen her husband come home tired, discouraged and broke after a hard week's work will understand.

After generations of tradition that kept wives of commercial fishermen strictly in the background while their husbands gambled against the sea and the weather, these women recently began to organize unique auxiliaries. They're determined to fight for their husbands' livelihoods.

"It may be halibut to you, but it's bread and butter to us," Mrs. Gus Molvik, newly-elected president of the Auxiliary of Halibut Fishermen's Wives, said emphatically.

The auxiliary, the latest one to spring up on the West Coast, had 150 women at their second meeting last week. It plans to have at least 500 by July 7 when the women meet again to bring all their favorite halibut recipes. They fully intend for the United States Senate to hear their complaints. Wives of tuna fishermen already have an auxiliary. Gill Netters salmon fishermen were represented by their wives at the halibut meetings.

Fishing Family
"My husband comes from a fisherman's family," Mrs. Molvik said. "All the way back to Norway his family were fishermen. But now he's working in the waterfront pool. We have four children and you can't feed four children on nothing."

"He came in from fishing one day about a month ago and I looked at the price for halibut in the paper. It was 13 cents a pound, and up north it was six cents a pound. It made me mad. I called up a man at the Deep Sea Fishermen's Union and said, 'Can't you do something about it?'"

"He said there were something like 10-million pounds of halibut in cold storage left over from last year's catch. He said maybe what the men needed was a wives' auxiliary, because they couldn't be out fishing and be on shore too, trying to do something about the prices."

"I'm surprised the men wanted us to help. For years fishing has been nothing but an all man's game. Women were trained to keep out of it. They are mostly Scandinavian people, you know, and Scandinavian women are not a complaining lot.

"I didn't say anything either for a long time. After all, I married a fisherman, and I knew what I was getting into. But I'm Irish, and I finally couldn't keep still."

Tough Job

"It isn't easy going out on those boats, you know. I know what they go through, because I went fishing with my husband right after we were married in 1940. We fished for shark livers off the coast of California. Once was enough for me."

"And when they take those boats out for two weeks, they have expenses. My husband's not a boat owner, but the men share the expenses."

Besides collecting halibut recipes at their next meeting, the women will hear a report on what the U. S. Senate could do to help. There is at present no quota on imported white fish, major competition for halibut. Last year Japan and other countries sent in more than 135,000,000 pounds of white fish, 15 times as much as was imported in 1940.

"Our husbands are halibut fishermen. That's all they want to do. What are we going to do if the price of fish is so low we can't live on it?" Mrs. Molvik concluded.
