

Democratic Party New Dealers Protest Leaders Losing Old Time 'Religion'

By LYLE C. WILSON
United Press Correspondent

Washington — (U.P.) — There's thunder on the left within the Democratic Party where the organized New Dealers protest that its House and Senate leadership have lost the old time religion.

This is rank ingratitude so far as Speaker Sam Rayburn is concerned.

Mr. Sam was one of the half dozen men on Capitol Hill who breathed legislative life into the reforms, reorganizations and projects which FDR's bright youngsters conceived downtown in the years 1933-37, or, maybe, 1938.

Those years were about the span of the New Deal as Mr. Roosevelt devised and effected it. War shadows were lengthening in the latter year and it was not long after that that the President, himself, was the target of left wing brickbats like those now being thrown at the speaker or at Sen. Lydon Johnson (D-Tex.), the competent Senate Democratic leader who was felled last weekend by a heart attack.

Lefties Begin to Yammer

One day as the war neared and the lefties began to yammer that FDR was ignoring reform for other things, the President read his news conference a typical Roosevelt homily. It related how the dislocation and fervers of the times back there in the mid-thirties had required the services of Dr. New Deal. Times and hills had changed, Mr. Roosevelt continued, and the country by now was needing the ministrations of Dr. Win-The-War.

It will take more than a simple statement to silence the critics of the Rayburn-Johnson program which charts a much more conservative course for the Democratic Party in this Congress than the left wing elements thereof would choose.

The program calls on the party to go part of the way with President Eisenhower on many an issue, being careful, always, to tag all good works with the Democratic stamp, if possible.

But in neither Johnson nor Rayburn is there any reluctance to fight. Rayburn, the old pro among his party's big wigs, is a slugger. He swings for a knock-down when he swings at all. Johnson, the handsome, smiling type of politician, has shown extreme skill as a boxer, a political Benny Leonard, if anyone can go back that far.

Because of his serious condition, Johnson probably won't be indulging in any political give and take for some time. His office already has announced he won't be back for the remainder of this congressional session. And his assistant, Sen. Earle C. Clements (D-Ky.), the Senate Democratic whip, already is taking over his duties. Clements is expected to carry on with the same policy and program set down by Johnson.

Demonstrates Technique

Only a few days before his illness Johnson amply demonstrated his technique as a political battler. There was a back and forth between Johnson and the President in which Johnson rubbed it in rather roughly that much of the Republican program this year had been put through Congress with Democratic votes. The point he was making was that Democrats are a high minded group of people who would not stoop to mere politics.

Comet Said Moving Away From Earth

Berkeley, Calif. — (U.P.) — Dr. Leland Cunningham, University of California astronomer, said today a comet first seen by a Czech a month ago is now moving away from the earth.

Cunningham's observations contradicted those of Czech astronomers as reported on a Radio Prague broadcast heard in London yesterday. The Czechs said the comet, the brightest seen this year, is still "approaching the earth."

Radio Prague said the comet was spotted by Antonin Mrkos, a worker at the State Meteorological Institute in the Tatra Mountains in the night between June 12 and 13.

"Actually, it was getting slightly nearer the earth at that time, but never significantly," Cunningham said. "Now it is receding rapidly from both the earth and the sun."

Even so, he said, it is still visible easily to telescopes.

At his next news conference, Mr. Eisenhower replied sharply, not so, and read a list of the legislative projects which the Democratic majorities had cut down or ignored. Back popped Johnson with an observation about Mr. Eisenhower which was sure to sting.

"Of course, I can understand that the President was speaking from a prepared list that someone had given him," said the senator. "After all, he spent last week in New England, and may not fully understand all he was talking about."

Johnson's policies obviously have not been dictated by any desire that Mr. Eisenhower loves him. More likely his idea was that a young man in his position may properly think one day of getting his party's presidential nomination. That day might be, say, in 1960. And the best way a Texan could win an honor would be by proving to the middle of the road and more conservative elements of his party that he is no radical. A nominee wants, above all else, a united party.

South America Shivers During Heavy Snowfall

Santiago, Chile — (U.P.) — The heaviest snowfall in 20 years hit this city Tuesday during a cold snap that has much of South America shivering.

Newspapers reported at least three persons have died in Chile as result of a severe winter.

The mercury dropped to 33 here Tuesday. In the Andean region, snows blocked many roads temporarily.

Hay Fever Report Service Announced

Portland — (U.P.) — A new hay fever report service was announced yesterday by the State Board of Health. The report will provide daily information on the amount of common pollens in the air over downtown Portland.

Dr. Harold Erickson, state health officer, said reports were being compiled from slides located on the roof of the downtown medical building.

He said the department was particularly interested in reports on ragweed, which has been spreading rapidly since it was first discovered in Oregon several years ago. Ragweed has been reported in almost every area of the state, he said, warning that unless action was taken soon, control would be virtually impossible.

The daily counts in Portland will be compiled for the pollen survey committee of the American Academy of Allergy.

Central Point Junior High Teacher Named

Central Point — Richard Traylor, former teacher at Compton Junior High school, Compton, Calif., has been retained to teach at the Central Point Junior High school, it was announced recently.

Traylor, a graduate of Southern Oregon college, has taught for four or five years, according to H. B. Jewett, school superintendent for district 6C. Roland Smith, former classroom teacher, has been principal of the Sams Valley school. Smith, also a Southern Oregon college graduate, has taught for two years.
