Rats Use Method Much Like Radar

Berkeley, Calif. — (U.P.) — Rats can be as blind as bats, but both can find their way around in total darkness by a method similar to radar.

Three psychologists at the University of California have obtained the first positive evidence that rats, like bats, can produce ultrasonic cries and can hear sounds too high for humans to distinguish. The scientists, carrying research a step further, showed that rats use the ability to get around in the dark.

The utrasonic noises bounce back to the animals off solid objects, thereby revealing the location of the obstacles. The scientists used blind rats in their experiments, teaching the animals to find their way through a maze to a feed box.

The three psychologists next plan to test other animals to learn just how common "animal radar" is. Drs. Donald A. Riley, Mark R. Rozenzweig and David Krech will report their findings in a forthcoming issue of a technical journal.

Berlin — (U.P.) — Walt Disney's film "The Vanishing Prairie" has been chosen the most popular decumentary film in the 1955 International Berlin Film Festival by a public opinion poll.

THE THRESHOLD OF PAIN

If I could stand it I might thumb through the files of back copy for a few decades and collect a substantial batch of pieces describing my bursitis, ivy poisoning, impacted Colles' fracture, diverticulosis, and whatnot—all of which were, needless to say, pretty serious.

You see, I am endowed with such a delicate inhibitory mechanism that the very thought that something is going to hurt releases cerebral control and automatically I begin to make noises such as ouch, take it easy and bloody murder. In politer words, my threshold of pain is scarcely noticeable.

Threshold in this physiological sense means the point at which an effect begins to be produced; or say the concentration or load of sugar in the blood at which sugar begins to escape through the kidneys into the urine; or the point at which stimulation of nerve or nerve center begins to produce response.

A physician can't exclude diabetes merely because a test of the urine shows no sugar. A test of the individual's carbohydrate (sugar and/or starch) tolerance is necessary too; that is, determination of the maximum amount of carbohydrate the patient can take without escape of sugar in the urine. This applies particularly to potential diabetics, persons who have inherited a tendency and those who are eating and drinking their way to diabetes.

Whether you are just ordinarily sensitive, oversensitive or insensitive to pain may or may not depend on inheritance and training. That's a good question for the sophomore psychologists to debate.

It is my belief that the state of calcium metabolism has a good deal to do with the threshhold of pain. In the first place, one of the physiological functions of calcium is to regulate excitability of nerve fibres and nerve centres—or in more familiar language, "steady the nerves" In medical practice an injection of calcium into a vein is one of the most effective emergency measures for the relief of severe biliary (gallstone) colic, renal (kidney stone) colic, the colic of lead poisoning or the intensely painful cramps of black widow bite.

High calcium diet supplemented with an optimal daily ration of calcium and D has apparently brought relief and in some instances cure of neuralgic headache and/or periodic sick headache (migraine), many readers have reported.

Aspirin and acetanilide addicts should take some calcium and D with every dose of either of these sense-deadeners.

If you are subject to neuralgic headache or migraine (periodic sick headache) send stamped, self-addressed envelope and ask for pamphlet Why Have Headache. If you are an acetanilide addict—acetanilide (phenylacetimide) is the pain-killing, blood-destroying, heart-poisoning ingredient in numerous nostrums with disarming parlor-car names; sometimes another coaltar derivative called phenacetin (acetophenetidin) having about the same effects, is used instead of acetanilid —the chapter on Abuse of Analgesic Drugs in the booklet C V D (about heart and artery troubles) may interest you. For the booklet send 25c and stamped self-addressed envelope.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

The Red Blood Vitamin

Please send in the enclosed stamped, self-addressed envelope the pamphlet, THE RED BLOOD VITAMIN (B-12). Sister writes from Mexico that her husband derives more benefit from it than he has had from many liver shots and raw liver cocktails . . . (Mrs. M. E. L.)

Answer—Yes, pure crystalline vitamin B-12 is blood building principle present in liver extracts and in raw liver.

Silver Nitrate Stains

What will remove the black stain left by silver nitrate? (W. H. M.)

Answer—First apply tincture of iodine, then photographic fixer of 25% solution sodium thiosulfate. Another way to remove silver nitrate stain from the skin is by applying 10% solution potassium cyanide. This removes stains from clothing too. However potassium cyanide is very poisonous, so it would be better to have it applied by chemist, pharmacist or physician.

Nature lovers are asked to please not remove any of the green flora (mucs spelled backwards) floating on Bear Creek.

This is being saved in case some Hollywood studio wants to go on location here for an African picture.

Cherry, Strawberry Pickers Requested

Salem —(U.P.)—A call has gone out for cherry pickers at the same time more strawberry pickers were needed.

Employment officials said the acute shortage of farm workers this season was due in part to the fact that migratory workers who usually arrive by this time from California are still in the neighbor state to the south because of late harvests there.

Some 20,000 workers now are picking strawberries. Cherry picking needs are expected to be at peak demand late this week.
