Old Oak Mantel Bought To Fit Over Fireplace

I wouldn't have bothered with it at all, but Jack was determined to have it right now. "What if I don't have a house with a fireplace yet? I'm going to some day, and I'll never be able to get a mantel cheaper than this."

I had to agree with him on that score. With an outlay of only $3 for a fireplace mantel of solid oak mounted on Ionic columns of the same material, he was virtually being paid to take it away.

It was a piece that was far from being antique. Maybe it had been made in the mid-1920s, but certainly not much before. Over-all, its width was 60 inches with an interior width of 41. Maximum height was 50 inches with an inner height of 39. Width of the shelf was exactly one foot.

Later that afternoon, when a neighbor of Jack's dropped in, I got a different slant on the matter. The neighbor was building a place of his own and when he saw Jack's latest acquisition he was quick to make an offer. Ten dollars at first, raising it gradually until his final price of $30 had been refused.

"No," Jack said. "It's worth more than that to me. I figure I'll build it next year, and when I do, it'll cost me at least $60 to get something like this."

That was a little over 18 months ago. When I attended their house warming recently, the oaken fireplace mantel with its Ionic columns was in place looking as if it had been built for that house alone.

"I saved even more on it," Jack said. "The builder wanted to nick me $90 for something that wouldn't have been anywhere near as good."

PROOF COIN HAS VALUE

Jim went on to explain that "trimes," as the 3-cent pieces were called in mint documents, being the sixth silver coin authorized by the government and first issued with only 750 fine silver instead of 900 fine as later, were not particularly scarce.

"The one that bum mentioned was 1855, too, one of the smaller ones that were put out after the new Mint Act that changed coinage in 1854," he added.

We stepped into a coin dealer's shop for a look at a catalog.

The dealer was happy to look it up for us.

An 1855 trime? No, no, it wasn't worth anything like $65, he said. That was far too high a figure. Why, $27.50 would be absolute tops. Unless, of course, what we happened to have was a proof coin. Now if that was the case, even $70 would not be too high a price.

JADE AMULET GLADLY

I sat my glass down on the coaster and picked up the piece of jade that lay beside it.

For some minutes now the sight of it had been bothering me. It looked as utilitarian as a little gear or sprocket, but the misty grey-green of its color and the simple, though diabolical looking, dragon that seemed to carve its way along the narrow surface of the piece had all the mystery of a thousand years.

The use of the stone, even how it was intended to serve as an ornament, was beyond me. It was about an inch and a half wide, a good five inches long and roughly a quarter of an inch thick, except at the ends and in the middle where narrow strips nearly half an inch deep had been left running across the width of the piece.

"Well," said Ed, taking the jade, "this had double purpose. It had certain magical powers, such as the Chinese so often attributed to jade amulets, and it had the job of protecting the belt by means of which a sword's scabbard was suspended on a warrior's hip."

ACCEPTED AS MONEY

Naturally, I wanted to know how he had got it.

"I bought it from a Chinese last week who had just come here from Singapore," he added. "He had a relative who had just got out of Laos, and he needed some machinery in a hurry and he gave me this as a sort of inducement, you might say."

I looked at Ed suspiciously and asked him what steps he had taken to find out its worth. For an answer, he produced a letter on the stationery of one of the best known dealers in oriental wares. It stated briefly that after an examination of his "chih," as they termed the piece they would be quite willing to take it off his hands for $1,000.

Around Hollywood

Hollywood (U.P.)—Hollywood has pioneered pet cemeteries and a dude ranch for dogs, and now comes the world's fanciest pet hospital and the first "Blue Cross" for four-footed patients.

Only in this land of palm trees and sunshine can dogs and cats apply for Blue Cross-type health insurance at $20 a year, beginning July 15.

When they get sick or need their toe nails clipped, they can be driven in an ambulance with a siren and two-way radio to the plushiest pet hospital in the land.

This "polyclinic hospital for pets" and "pet health plan" are the inspirations of a group including movie star Glen Ford, ex-TV producer Ed Lewis and William Bowman, former head of California's Blue Shield hospital plan (for two-footed patients).

Special Kitchen

The pet hospital will feature a drug store for dogs and cats headed by an "animal pharmacist", an x-ray laboratory, 13 wards with 680 "beds", a full-time animal pathologist and a dietary expert with a special kitchen.

On a closed-circuit television set student veterinarians can watch a surgeon operate on some rare animal case, just like on "Medic."

Two-footed visitors will be regulated. They can see their pet patients only on the closed-circuit TV set or through one-way windows into the 13 wards, so the dogs and cats can recuperate undisturbed.

Ford (a two-dog man) and his colleagues announced their plan at a press conference where a model of the $450,000 new hospital was on display.

"Our hospital, now being built, will have the most rigid standards applied to human hospitals," Bowman explained. "Health insurance for pets is here! We hope to make this plan nation-wide!"

"Infection will be guarded against! Each dog will have separate runs and cages so there can be no nose-to-nose contact!"

"Of course," he added, "we expect the first pet applicants to be chronic hydrochondriacs. It's the same way when I started human health insurance."

The hospital also will offer training lessons, free puppies, a lost-and-found service and a beauty salon for poodles. But hydrants and dog swimming pools are missing.

"No, they're playing this pretty straight," said one of the group's numerous press agents. "Plenty of trees on the ground, though."

Nehru Scoffs at Russian Weakness

Rome—(U.P.)—Indian Premier Jawaharlal Nehru scoffs at the idea that Russia's current "friendship" campaign is due to weakness.

Anybody who believes the Soviets' present policy is prompted by weakness is suffering under a "completely erroneous impression," Nehru told a press conference.

The Indian statesman made the statement in reply to questions concerning his current "co-existence" tour of Asian and European countries. Among the countries he visited were Russia, Poland and Yugoslavia.

Nehru met newsmen at his hotel after being received in a private audience by Pope Pius.

The audience concluded the Premier's whirlwind visit to Italy, a country outwardly cool to his "co-existence" policies.

It was Nehru's first meeting with the Pope, although he has passed through Rome several times since World War II.

Following the press conference, Nehru was to leave for London for pre-Geneva talks with British leaders.
