The Good Neighbor . . .

Frank Curry, who lives two doors down the street from me in town, is a kind husband and indulgent father. He is a neighbor who visits the sick, hauls old ladies to church, keeps his dog at home and never forces the people in his block to be a captive audience to baseball broadcasts. His wife and their two teen-agers are as good as Frank to live nigh. We love them all.

Then comes the deer season. Frank misses no minute of it. His pet hunting grounds are a 14,000-acre tree farm that neighbors on the boom-pond shack where I hole up at odd times to pound out tall tales on my 1909 Model Oliver Visible typewriter. I've seen Frank working as a good neighbor here.

Frank started coming up the Polewater as a boy with his father, around 40 years ago. Virgin timber stood tall and thick on the land. The only deer to be hunted were up along the streams, or on the burns of 1902 or later in high open country.

Gate and Lock . . .
The hunters then, as now, started many forest fires. This made trouble smoke up between hunters and timberland owners. Most of the owners were farmers. Some hunters claimed a sort of roving squatter's right — if there could be such a thing — to camp out and hunt deer any old place.

Then the loggers surged in with saw and ax. The giants fell. The best timber was yarded out and rafted to the mills. thousands of feet of cheaper logs were left to be burned as slash or to rot. Browse grew on the cutovers. Then for years the hunting up the Polewater was better than it had ever been before the harvest.

Meanwhile the Douglas fir seedlings came up above the stumps, slash, browse and weeds. Fires left black holes in the green crop, and some of them were hunters' fires. But the owners kept the property, paying taxes, also paying protection fees to state forestry and the forest fire association.

By 1940 the older burns and cutovers had stands of pole and pilings trees on the lower sites. War demand brought the loggers in again. Old grades were made into new roads. In due course the Polewater Tree Farm was certified. The roads were gated as part of the protection program. Frank Curry and other hunters who came back every deer season found locks on gates and closure notices posted on favorite hunting grounds. This they did not like. Nach.

But in the main the deer hunters were Frank Currys. Good neighbors in their home towns, good sportsmen in the field, respecters of property rights and the laws of property. The gate breakers were a minority.

Red Hat Day . . .
The Frank Currys have worked for the right of sportsmen, as they see them, through their organizations and according to law. The vandals, drunks, poachers, thieves, juvenile and parental delinquents, arsonists and litter-ments. Many people would like to know the names of these beautiful creatures. That's what I suggested several years ago. I now note the giving of such credit is being seriously considered. This brings to mind my other suggestion as to chorus girls. I suggest the ladies of the ensemble be given numbers as football and baseball players are so their identity can be learned by consulting the program.

bugs among the hunting hosts are a black blight to the Frank Currys the true sportsmen, as they are menaces to tree farm owners — and to the managers of public forests.

Now all hands are moving forward together in joint programs that hold great promise for the use of tree farms for hunting and other recreation, and for increasing control of the rifle-packing revolutionists and outlaws who go to the woods in that deer season. The cooperative groups in Oregon are sponsoring a Governor's Red Hat Day, on which an effort will be made to get the signature of every Oregon hunter to a pledge "to be law abiding, to respect the rights and property of others, to be careful with fire and firearms."

Another program of the kind is in the works for Washington. I have faith in them because I have faith in men like Frank Curry, my good neighbor.

LACK OF SLEEP BLAMED

New York — (U.P.) — Dr. Samuel Henry Prince, of King's college, Halifax, N.S., came up with a new reason Sunday for New York's high juvenile delinquency rate. Dr. Prince told the congregation at St. Stephen's Protestant Episcopal church that one cause for the crime rate may be that heat and noise keeps New Yorkers from getting enough sleep.

Argentina Church Hours Pass Quietly

Buenos Aires — (U.P.) — Church-going hours passed quietly Sunday in comparison with a week ago when demonstrations resulted in injuries to six policemen and arrest for more than 100 Catholics.

The only reminder of church-state friction was an unsigned editorial in the Peronist organ Democracia. It said Argentina's only troubles in the past two weeks have been "street disorders and provocative pastoral acts" which it blamed on "those who have the deaths and the sorrows of the wounded of June 16 on their consciences." June 16 was the date of the navy-led revolt.

Britons Opposed To Capital Punishment

By UNITED PRESS
London — (U.P.) — The mass-circulation Daily Mirror reported today that Britons are two-to-one against capital punishment.

The newspaper with 4,500,000 circulation said more than 30,000 readers answered an opinion poll following the controversial hanging last week of blonde killer Ruth Ellis. The paper said 20,509 voted against the death penalty and 11,057 in favor.

The case of the 28-year-old model who shot one of her two-lovers stirred a storm of protest against capital punishment.

As We Live

13-Year-Old Boy Almost A Juvenile Delinquent

Children who are easily influenced by others are always potential juvenile delinquents. That is the danger facing the situation the troubled father describes thus:

(Q) "My son, who is 13 years old, has never been a healthy boy and, as a result, he has never been able to play games and do many of the things boys of his age did. Consequently, he has had few friends. In the past two months he has gotten into a crowd of boys who might be called 'bad actors.' They don't actually do

Dr. Herlock months he has gotten into a crowd of boys who might be called 'bad actors.' They don't actually do anything seriously wrong, but they have a bad reputation in school and in the neighborhood.

"I have tried to point out to my son that this is not the type of boy he should be associating with, but he sticks up for them and claims I try to keep him from having friends. I have noticed a marked change in him since he started to go with these boys, especially in that he is sometimes not too truthful; he comes home with things in his pockets that I suspect he has taken from some of the children in school, and he is beginning to talk against school and the teachers. I am worried about him."

(A) You should be worried about your son, as he is headed for trouble unless something is done and done soon to stop it. The fact that a change has come over your son in so short a time shows what is likely to happen in the future if he continues to pal around with these boys.

Because your son was not able to play with other boys when he was younger and was deprived of the friendships every child normally craves, he is anxious to keep the friends he now has. This will make him an easy target for any activities when the group he goes with will need a scapegoat.

Easily Influenced
A child who has had few friends almost always is very easily influenced, once he acquires some friends. He is so afraid that he will lose his new friends that he allows himself to be led around by the nose.

If your son's friends were boys you approved of, there would be little cause for concern. However, as they have bad reputations, the chances are that they will soon be doing things that go beyond the limits of mischief. Your son will be dragged down if you do not put a stop to his association with them.

On The Side

"Tis in your eyes, my sweetest love, My only world, I see; Let but their orbs in sunshine move And earth below, and skies above May frown or smile for me."

How many drinks are extracted from a fifth of whisky in the average cocktail bar or restaurant? Several years ago bartenders were expected to get 25 drinks from a fifth. Now the size of the drink has been decreased to less than an ounce. Not only that, the practice of watering whiskies has greatly increased. Watering whisky served by a bar or restaurant is, of course, a criminal offense. It is obtaining money under false pretenses and also a form of tax evasion.

Passing By

Charlie Berns. Elegantly attired and studiously debonair millionaire restaurateur. Co-founder and currently guiding genius of that place on West Fifty-third st., Manhattan, which first achieved fame as "Jock and Charlie's." Incidentally, isn't it surprising nobody has ever thought of calling a cafe, "Tom and Jerry's"?

Asides

How sharp are you on the details of United States history? Can you give the location of Bull Run where the celebrated battle of the War Between the States was fought? . . . Am asked if Gypsy Rose Lee, the highly educated stripteuse, has retired from the entertainment field. Gypsy, who is happily married and very domesticated, is only partially retired. She plays a few night club engagements annually to get herself a little extra pocket housekeeping money.

Asking

Queries from clients. Q. What is New York's best restaurant? A. Le Pavillon. . . Q. At what age does a filly become a mare? A. Five. . . Q. What is the origin of the "finnan" in that type of codfish known as "finnan haddie"? A. The "finnan" was inspired by the name of Findon, a town in Scotland, near Aberdeen. Residents of this town have long been celebrated for their skill in preparing finnan haddie for the market.

Horses and Women

The highest paid people on the sales staff of a department store are the salesmen in the women's shoe department. It takes a highly intelligent man of strong character and great patience to successfully sell shoes to females. He must also be of very good appearance and possessed of a bit of charm. Women have 86 different types of feet so fitting them is quite a task. They all want to make their feet look smaller. In this connection it is interesting to note that some of the most successful women in the history of the world had large feet.

Ignorance

I heard one Manhattan taxi driver ask another where the "Little Church Around the Corner" was. An astonishing display of ignorance by a cab driver. In London a man can't get a license to drive a cab until he passes an examination which proves he knows the location of every important hotel, club, church and place of interest in the entire area of greater London.

Please Note

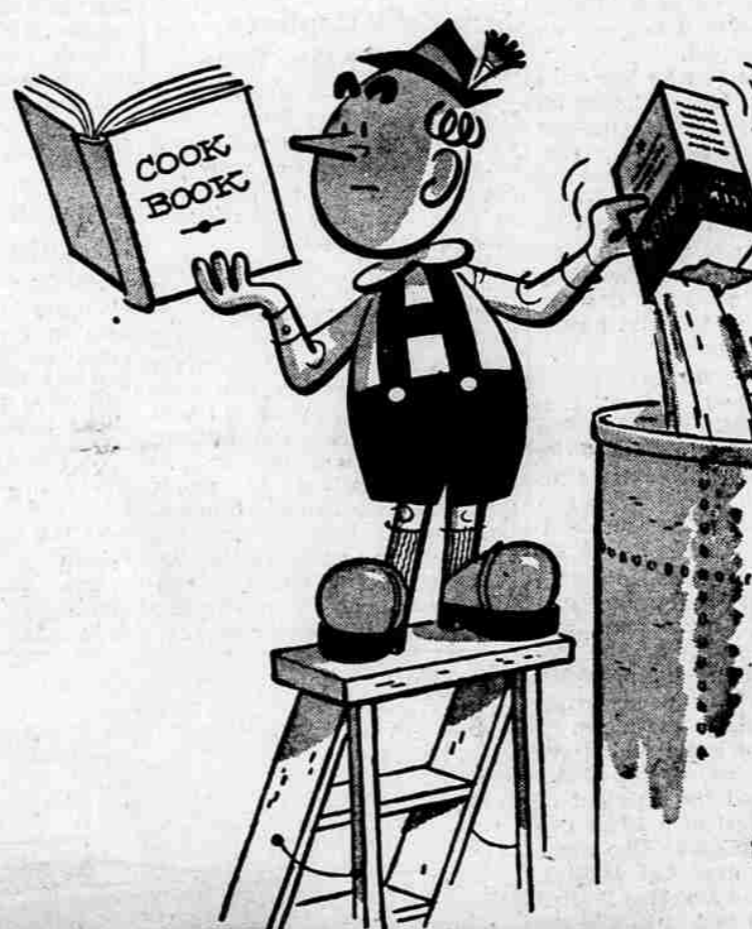

Bricklayers are the highest paid hourly craft in the world. There are about 130,000 bricklayers in the United States. While admitting their hourly pay is unusually high, the bricklayers say a high yearly wage is impossible because the work in most sections is seasonal. Why doesn't a bricklayer master an additional trade that would keep him busy in the winter? Surely a man with intelligence enough to become a bricklayer should have no difficulty in becoming a carpenter, electrician or plumber.
